Milk Can't Be Made On Tonic
Grass is a good tonic for the cow but she can't make milk on tonic, according to the Larrowe Institute of Animal Economics. If she is expected to continue to do a day's work every day, she will have to get enough to eat of a good nutritious feed. "Most dairymen realize that in some respects a dairy cow is a great deal like a human being," states the Institute. "No human being would stop eating meat and potatoes simply because he was eating lettuce and spinach to tone up his system, yet many dairymen believe that their cows do not need grain simply because they have grass to graze on. "Fresh spring grass is a good tonic for the cow. It is green, juicy and palatable. Cows like it. It tones them up and for a time will actually stimulate milk production. But grass at its best is half water, and a cow has to eat an enormous amount of pasture daily to get the feed she needs. Grass, therefore, should be used more as a tonic than as a feed. All dairymen should use pasture but they should use it intelligently and should use it with grain. The practice of turning out herds on pasture as soon as the grass comes up thick and green is always a costly move, both in damage to pasture, and to an even greater extent, in the falling off in production on the part of cows relying on grass alone for their nourishment." Actual tests by E. A. Hanson, in charge of cow test association work in Minnesota, of the effects of pasture feeding as compared to the use of grain, especially throughout the spring and early summer, showed that 1,231 cows receiving no grain on pasture averaged 228 pounds of butterfat per year at a feed cost of $11.57. In contrast to this, 372 cows receiving grain while on pasture averaged 296 pounds of butterfat per year, at a total feed cost of $40.35. That extra $7.48 spent for feed during the pasture season resulted in an additional 68 pounds of butterfat from each cow, which, on the basis of 40 cents a pound, was worth $27.20, or a net profit of $19.72 above the added cost of feed.
