MR. MELLON'S LETTER.

Not in a long time has there bee a more complete flattening out than that which was administered recent ly by Secretary Mellon in his reply to the Princeton Professors who advocated the cancellation or scaling down of the debts which European countries owe the United States as a result of the war financing.

Secretary Mellon completely ans wered every argument brought to the court by the educators and his arguments are so concise and pointedly ments are so concise and pountedly made, that even though the Courier may not agree with all the Mellon policies, this particular one is good, and ought even to penetrate the densest professorial skull structure.

The renly is necssarily too long to be commented on in detail here, but a careful perusal of the entire letter will be worth any real American's time. It has been a familiar contention of debt cancellationists that we ough to forgive these obligations betion of debt cancellationists that we ough to forgive these obligations because the money borrowed from us by the allies was spent in America and remained here. Mr. Mellon disposes of this contention by pointing out that this was the financial program agreed to by all the allied nations between themselves before we went into the war. He then reminds the professors that this spending of money was not war. He then reminds the professors that this spending of money was not altogether one-sided. During the war America expended hundreds of millions in Europe for supplies and other war expenses. We did not borrow the money as the Allies did to spend in America but paid cash. That is why the Allies emerged owing us and we emerged owing no other nation.

Then Mr. Mellon sums up, "We are now urged to cancel these debts be-now urged to cancel these debts because it is alleged that they were incurred in a common cause, but neither abroad nor in this country has it been suggested that if this is to be done we are to be reimbursed the dol-lars actually expended by us in Great Britian and France so that the goods and services they sold us might con-stitute their contribution to the common cause."

Here is the logic of the situation, and it is well put: If the Allies are to have back the money they spent in America because it was spent here for the common cause, whey are we not entitled to a return of the hard cash we spent in France and England for a common cause?

To the contention that we ought to cancel the debts because we furnished money in lieu of men and the Allies supplied the soldiers, Secretary Mellon well says, "I am not goin to attempt a discussion of the military." tempt a discussion of the miliatry contribution made by the United States to he winning of the war, other than to remark than when the crucial than to remark than when the crucial period was reached in the spring and summer of 1918, our troops were there." There is doubt about that.

To the cry of the cancellationists that we are enslaying Europe in order to collect the money Mr. Mellon replies with cold figures which show that "all of our principal debtors are already receiving from Germany more already receiving from Germany more already receiving from Germany more than enough to pay their debts to the United States, and France and Italy, with the exception of this year in the

with the exception of this year in the case of the latter, are receiving from the same source more than enough to pay their debts to Great Britain also. In the case of Great Britain, whom the cancellationists picture to us as struggling under the burden of debt we have now put on her, John Bull, the figures show, will receive from debt payments to her and her former enemy and her former allies this year $2,000,000 more than enough to pay us without calling on the British taxpayers. payers.

SHOULD AID MARINE. It is indeed encouraging to know that our leading men of the business world realize the necessity of maintaining the United States Merchant Marine. Charles M. Schwab, recently returned from his seventieth trip abroad, and incidently he came home on road, and incidently he came home on the great American liner, the Levia-than. After predicting a prosperous year for American business and es-pecially the steel business, which is usually regarded as the barometer of ou reconomic situation, Mr. Schwab touched on the important merchant marine problem and said that he had been impressed with the Leviathan been impressed with the Leviathan and her crew, declaring that the big ship was a good example of what America could accomplish in the shipping

Mr. Schwab advocated legislation which would enable our ships to compete with the merchant marine of the other countries on an equitable basis and stated that without some sort of government aid this coul dnot be done The steel magnate added that he did not believe the government should re-main in the shipping business but that the government should aid the shipp-ing business. Continuing he said:

"The German government is today making liberal subsidies for privately owned ships, and while our people would never consent to a subsidy, I think some plan should be worked out whereby Americans could have defi-nite aid in the development of ship-

There is, of course; difference of opinion as to how our marine should be maintained, whether by the government direct, or by government aid to the shipping business. But there i no difference of opinion in America a whether the merchant marinshould be maintained and developed
