Resistance was hopeless. The swarms of False Faces seemed to care nothing for death if only they could bring down an Iroquois. I was knocked senseless by a blow which I partially warded with my tom ahawk. When I came to I was lying in the snow in front of a huge fire. My arms were bound and my head achee so violently that I felt sick. "Is my brother in pain?" asked the voice of Ta-wan-ne-ars. I rolled over to find him lying be side me, the blood from three or four trivial cuts freezing on his head and

"Yes," I groaned, "but 'tis naught." "There was treachery," he said. They knew we were coming, and they lost many men so that they might take us alive."

"All our warriors-" I faltered. He turned his head to the left; and. following his gaze, I saw that I was on the right of a line of recumbent figures, which my dizziness would not permit me to count.

"No not all, I think," Ta-wan-ne-ars answered after a moment. "Five are slain and fourteen others lie here. But I do not see the Otter."

"The Otter suspected something wrong," I said. "'Twas he who answered the owl's call."

"It may be he escaped," replied Tawan-ne-ars. "I must warn our brothers to say naught of him. If the Keepers do not suspect, they may believe they have all of us safe in their

The favor for magpie effects has esulted in a run on black-and-white scarfs. Now that navy has come into such prominence, navy-and-white handblocked types are wresting the honors somewhat from black-and-white.

The vogue for the two-piece suit which calls for the tailored blouse, brings the gay print tie, as pictured, into the list of popular neckwear for spring.

As the season advances it is more and more apparent that blue, especially navy, has become the first choice of smart women for spring. Consequently many silk print frocks are banded with navy, also the accessories which complete the costume are navy. The newest silk or chiffon prints present navy-with-white in keen competition to black-and-white.
