"Tramp" Cows Cost Farmers More Than Billion a Year

Huge Drain on Agriculture Can Be Offset By Better Methods, Says Institute Founder

By L. J. BROSEMER

Two groups of farms represent an average business investment of $21,000 per farm. One group showed a yearly labor income of $1,423. The other group cleared only $95 labor income for twelve months' hard work.

What all of us with money invested in land, animals and crops want in goodly measure, year after year, is "labor income." Because labor income represents the amount of earnings left for one year's work after all expenses and interest at 5% on our investment have been taken into account. If we can't make money, why farm at all?

Quite a big difference between $1,423 and $95 as the result of a whole year's work! At least that is how it struck me, listening to James E. Larrowe outline the three factors which are keeping down profits in America's greatest industry. These are the waste, not the cost, of feed; the low production per animal; and the waste of time because of poor management.
