Because She Took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

The fertile valleys of Oregon help to produce the sugar of the Sumatra tin can. In one of the remaining establishments of the world, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was manufactured. It was a combination of work and play, and she did not mind it. At times she would have to stay at home for a few days, but she could hardly wait. For five years she was in this unusual condition. She tried various medicines. At last a friend of hers spoke of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and she gave it a trial. "Ever since I am a healthier and stronger girl," she writes, "I am recommending Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to all my friends who tell me how they suffer and I am willing to answer letters from women asking about it. Lydia E. Pinkham's address is 215 Water St., Lowell, Mass.

MOTHER, WHEN I GROW UP WILL I LIVE WITH YOU AND DADDY?

TERROR OF THE UNKNOWN

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

THE trouble and the pain which we contemplate are generally far more serious than those which we have experienced. I am to have a tooth extracted tomorrow and I shudder at the thought, and yet as I recall the dental experiences which I have previously gone through, I find them not nearly so dreadful as I had anticipated. I am to meet an angry and disgruntled partner this afternoon, who will have come five hundred miles to voice his dissatisfaction at the way his offspring has been mentally handled by his instructors and the administration generally. I dread the ordeal, and yet I know I shall get through it quite amicably when the moment arrives.

Elizabeth had come down from the country to enter high school. She had never been away from home alone before, and the people young and old who were to be met next day were all strangers to her. The subjects she was to take up were new and strange, the methods of teaching were to be quite unfamiliar to her. Her face took on a very serious look as we sat quietly before the fire in the dusk of a Sunday evening. There were tears in her eyes as she turned to me, and a tremor in her voice.

"Won't tomorrow be an awful day?" she said. It was the terror of the unknown which she was talking about. When she met it, she found that her fears had been for nothing. She had had a very happy day and she announced when she came home at night, and through the days that followed, the experience continued. When it was through, there were tears in her eyes again because of the experience which she had so dreaded was over.

Mark was going into a new job. He had worked hard, and college and had undertaken a number of things which he had carried to a conclusion very successfully. He was to try

LATEST IN BLOUSE

The blouse as it is created by Paris imagination is doubtless more interesting than any other garment of the past years. In many cases of the Paris creations, the blouse is apparently a three-quarter part of the entire costume, covering the hips, over a simple skirt finely pleated. There are many types of blouses.

Much Treasure Is Found Under Turkish Capital

Constantinople—Treasures of the Byzantine empire and a tomb of its king have been discovered in an ancient eastern by Prof. Edmund Tilly, an American, attached to the British legation. For two years this young American has been exploring the maze of ancient, intricate and mysterious passages beneath the city of Constantinople. He has discovered a tomb of its king, and he has managed to provide himself with a coffin are unsolved mysteries, for he died as the people whom the emperor had called for help carried him out of his living grave into the sunlight, which he had so long avoided, above.

A Living Tomb Here Professor Tilly found not only the usual beautiful columns, with carved capitals rising in blackness from heaps of rubbish scoured away by rats, but a living tomb as well.

The first object his flashlight fell upon was an ancient coffin, and beside the coffin, lying on a bed of silk and gold, was the body of a man. How the old man had made the black Byzantine pit his home and how he had managed to provide himself with a coffin are unsolved mysteries, for he died as the people whom the emperor had called for help carried him out of his living grave into the sunlight, which he had so long avoided, above.

Of the several hundred cisterns which make a labyrinth of the ancient city, underground, many of the fifty-eight thus far located are still partly filled with water from mysterious unlocated sources. Most of these cisterns are accessible only by rope ladders swung down wellheads, and can be investigated only by wading through slimy mud and dirty, icy water.

something entirely new this time is a distant city which he had never yet seen. His heart failed him a little. "Tell me what to do," he said. "How shall I meet the new situation?" "The new job," I explained, "is going to be very little different from the old ones you have had. People are about the same wherever you find them. Make yourself useful and necessary to the people for whom you are working, and you will get on; and above all, be yourself."

Mark is getting on. The terror of the inexperienced left him shrewdly, and he is as much at home on the new job as he used to be on the old. I wonder often, as most of us do, I imagine, how I shall meet the great change which comes at the end of life. My father used to say when he thought of the "last judgment," "That will be an awful day," but he was very peaceful as if he were dropping off to sleep. His terror of the unknown vanished.

DIPPING INTO SCIENCE

Who Discovered Electric Lights?

Sir Humphrey Davy, a chemist (1778-1829) discovered that two wires attached to a battery in a certain way and with charcoal on the ends would allow current to jump from one wire to the other with such speed that the charcoal became white-hot, producing a brilliant light. Hence this brilliant electric light was discovered.
