

THE IMPRESSION WE LEAVE By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK

Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

 HAVE often wondered what my father used to think of the im pression he made upon me when as he sometimes did, he sat down to talk to me upon serious matters and to advise me. He did not do this often, but it was seriously done when he undertook it, and sincerely sat quite impassive as he talked. I made no reply. I did not enter into the discussion at all, and I gave no indication that his words were fall ing upop anything but very stony ground. I imagine he thought:

"Well, the boy is hopeless any way; youth goes its own road regardless of the advice of age, so why talk longer."

That is about what I wanted him to think, but in reality I had great respect for his suggestions. I valued then and I value them even more highly today. I had the feeling which most youths have of not wanting to give the impression that I cared much for what was being said

I was walking down Michigan avenue one rainy morning not long ago when I was hailed by a friendly voice from a car on the beulevard.

"Where are you going?" the voice inquired, and then "Let me take you" It was Payton whom I had not seen for ten years or so-in fact not since he had graduated from college. Poy ton had had his ups and downs in college. His oath scholastically and merally had not always been as straight as I could have wished and had more than once counseled him He tucked me into the runabout and we started down the street toward destination.

"Where've you been since I last saw you?" I inquired. He had been everywhere it seemed to me-he is an engineer-in South America in Nicaragua, in the Canat Zone, and he had had a most interesting and profit able experience. Now he had come back to a different sert of civilization He told his story well, and we sat parked at the side of the street until

I almost forgot my errand down the "Do you remember." he asked me as I was leaving him, "that you used

I was an undergraduate? I wanted ou to think then that I gave attle heed to it, and I know you thought that was the case. You were quite mistaken. I knew you were right, and I followed your advice though I wanted to make you think otherwise. I've been in some of the worst holes in the world but I want you to know that I've kept clean. Don't be discouraged; you make more of an impression on us than you think."

Hammond dropped in at homecoming. He had been a very arrogant. onceited fellow in college, able but tactless.

"You tried to teach me to be a lit. te more tactful." he said, "ang I guess you thought you failed Well I'm learning. You really did make dent on my thick skin though it seemed not at the time."

anticipated and the party was over-The youth lived on an Apache resertaken by heavy snow before returning. vation in New Mexico until he was fourteen years old, when his father was banished from the tribe because of smallpox. The son elected to go with his father, as did an old squaw. They went to the mountains, which extend from New Mexico to southwestern Texas. The father, very ill, soon died, and the Indian woman died soon afterward. The boy buried them and faced primitive life alone.

He obtained food by picking wild berries, and by killing fish and animals with a spear made by fastening a sharp flint rock on a long pole. The boy caught a wolf cub, tamed it, and taught it to help him hunt.

Recently, after wandering to the Rio Grande, the young man was taken from his primitive world by officers who found him sitting naked on the river bank. He was brought to Wichita Falls, but he refused to eat cooked food or to sleep on a bed. He rebelled against clothing, but finally accepted it.

Sin Roba had learned Spanish while on the Apache reservation in New Mexico, and it was in this tanguage that he revived his power of speech to tell the strange story of his experiences. He was then taken to a state hospital, where physicians pronounced him "an unusually bright fellow." The youth is now trying to learn the ways of white men. He has refused to return to the Indians who drove out his father.

New York .- When Francis Flynn was arraigned before Magistrate Smith in West Side court, the charge entered against him was disorderly conduct. but it was really for larceny that he spent three days in jail, being unable to pay an alternative $10 fine, He had stolen a kiss and the story of the theft was told rather vehemently by the kissee and complainant, Patrolman William Kearney of the West Sixty-eighth Street station. As he told it he glared at Flynn, who appeared in court wearing a police-man's uniform coat, a pair of illfitting blue trousers and a pair of shoes much too large for him.

"I was standing on the corner," said Patrolman Kearney, "when this -this-defendant dashed up to me wearing only lightweight underwear, and hugged and kissed me."

Philadelphia, - Rich in treasures, and strewn with bodies of musicians, servants and gold-bedecked women of the harem who accompanied their master in death, one of the most remarkable graves found thus far in Ur of the Chaldees has been discovered by the joint archeological expedition of the University of Pennsylvania and the British museum, says a report just received.

The grave is unlike others excavat ed in Ur, writes C. Leonard Woolley. director of the expedition, and bas provided definite information new to science as well as affording material for far-reaching theories concerning the history of civilization.

The body of the king was not found. but presence of the bodies of more than a score of men and women who constituted the king's household, of fers proof, Mr. Woolley asserts, that in the fourth millenium B. C., there were practiced in Mesopotamia burial rites and ceremonies about which la: ter tradition is silent and archeologists hitherto knew nothing.

A magnificently decorated chariot and harp, gold and silver vessels, an exquisite toilet set, and various other treasures yielded by the grave serve to illustrota f material civilization which Mesopo tamia enjoyed more than 5,000 years ago, says the report. Excavation of the grave, which losely followed upon that of the grave of Mes-Kalam-Dug, a royal prince, was accomplished only after considerable time had been spent in uncovering an area some 40 feet by 17 feet.

Paris.-Lost kisses were appraised at 40,000 francs recently by French courts. Such damages were awarded Madame Marie Laparcerie, a writer of note, upon a showing that she was unable for months to kiss her children because her lip. injured in an auto mobile accident, pained her too much when she tried to bestow the materna kiss.

Madame Laparcerie lost her suit in the lower courts when her claim was based on a scar on her breast that she felt would prevent her from wearing low-cut evening gowns. The "kiss' plea, on her appeal, moved the court and she won her case.
