Those Toothsome Apple Pies.
 The origin of the toothsome variety of pastry known technically and practically as apple pie has long been shrouded in mystery. That it has had a long, if not eventful history, is evidenced by the distinct recollection of men now approaching the period of the serene and yellow leaf of the apple pie "mother used to make," and which formed such a prominent place in the dinner pail menu at the midday recesses of the old-fashioned district school.
 And now the good old "roastin' ear" time is with us once again.

Selling Father a New Car

By WILLIAM MARSH

"ABSOLUTELY nothing doing!" Father banged his fist down on the table with such vehemence that the breakfast dishes rattled. "I'm perfectly satisfied with my old car and will not be bulldozed into buying a new one!"

Bill was ashamed of the "family bus," as he derisively termed it. More ashamed than ever, now that he had a peach of a girl to take riding. It didn't matter so much about his sister Corinne.

When she went out somebody else supplied the conveyance, and every time that Bill saw her depart in young Doctor Jordan's smart roadster or the Whipple boys' limousine, he felt a twinge of envy—not for himself, but for Dot—that peach of a girl.

Bill finished his poached eggs morosely and departed for the warehouse of Sanders and company, whose rising young shipping clerk he fondly fancied himself to be. His way led him past the showrooms of the Berwick Super-Eight and according to custom he paused and gazed covetously through the plate-glass window at the polished, shining model.

"Beauty, isn't she?" said a pleasant voice. And Bill turned to see one of the salesmen he had frequently spotted showing off the beauty's fine points to possible purchasers.

"I'll say so!" declared Bill fervently.

"Interested in cars?" asked the other.

"Well, not exactly," gulped Bill.

"That is, my father—"

"Thinking of buying, is he? Fine. What make has he now?"

Bill named it, inwardly cursing it for being the unobtrusive species it was.

"Good little car in its day," said the salesman kindly and, thanks be, thought Bill, not at all condescendingly. "But not, as you can see, to be mentioned in the same breath with this. Now, step in a moment—"

When Bill stepped out again, he had all the talking points of the Berwick at his tongue's end; he was late for work and he had given Mr. John Wildman his father's name, address and probable hours at home. Not that he expected it would do any good, remembering his father's face and fist at the breakfast table. But it seemed a small return for the twenty minutes of the salesman's time.

Mr. John Wildman came that evening. As it chanced, his prospect had gone up to the corner drug store for cigars and had remained to chat with the proprietor, Corinne, answering the doorbell and finding that her father's caller was a singularly attractive, alert looking young man, took it upon herself to see that the moments spent waiting hung not too heavily on his hands.

In the course of polite conversation they discovered two mutual acquaintances and several common interests, so that by the time his prospect's pungent cigar smoke in the front hall heralded the arrival of business and end of sociability, young Wildman had registered a silent resolution not to take "no" for an answer—from Corinne's father, of course.

But in the days that followed Bill knew no peace. "Set him on my trail!" his father burst forth frequently, "and we'll see who wins in the end. Oh, I'll grant he's all right as young fellows go and knows his business, but no young whippersnapper can foist off anything on me that I don't want!"

Not only to his father was Bill persona non grata, but young Doctor Jordan and the older Whipple boy cast frosty eyes upon him when they met.

Without doubt they held him responsible for the fact that their cars no longer drew up at the door of his home to take riding his sister. If Bill had set the salesman on his father's trail, so also had he provided a suitor for Corinne who won out over all rivals.

In fact, John soon ceased to worry about disposing of a Berwick Super-Eight. His thoughts and ambitions centered alone on the winning of Corinne. Although he still maintained a pretense of regarding her father as a probable purchaser, both he and Corinne—and the probable purchaser—knew the bluff for what it was.

Only Bill remained unobserving. Thoughts of the Berwick Super-Eight crowded his vision to the exclusion of all else. Spring was approaching, when he would want to take Dot riding. Another season in the old bus was more than he could stand.

"Dad," he broke out desperately one evening, "do we, or do we not, get a new car this year?"

His father regarded him over his glasses. "I guess you win, William," he said resignedly. "John informed me last night that he wants to marry Corinne. Your sister informed me this morning the least I could do in the way of a wedding present would be a car. So I shall purchase a Berwick. Yes, you win."

But his son's face was long. "Don't see how that helps me any—giving it to Corinne," he said grimly.

"You don't get me at all, William," retorted his father. "We got the Berwick, they got the 'bus.' Good Lord, William, your mother and I didn't start with even a flivver! You young folks—"

But Bill was at the telephone to date up Dot for a ride.

Like a Colorful Tapestry!

ONCE upon a time, a roof was just a roof. Nowadays it must be beautiful as well. It must set off your house against its background, like a colorful tapestry.

You can have just such a roof—with Johns-Manville Shingles. And you sacrifice none of the other qualities a roof must have. J-M Shingles offer you, in addition to colorful beauty, a roof that is durable, fire resistant, inexpensive.

Let us tell you how little it costs to provide such a roof for your new house or for re-roofing your present house.

The Next Time You Buy Gas — Try Sterling Ethyl Gasoline

YOU'LL FIND in this one red fuel all the live energy that forms the pep and power of "high test" gasolines combined with a finer quality of knock elimination than is found in special knockless fuels—plus an original evenness of combustion and a uniformity of mileage, power and acceleration that is GUARANTEED.

GUARANTEED? Many people have asked, "How can a gasoline be guaranteed?" Ethyl is the only gasoline that reaches you with its quality absolutely certified. Here is why:

Sterling Ethyl is tested and approved by the Ethyl Corporation before it is dispensed to the public, to determine that the rigid specifications required of the basic fuel in this premium gasoline are present.*

As a result every user of ethyl gasoline—as in no other fuel—possess the assurance that every gallon contains all the qualities of engine performance that can be refined into gasoline with the knowledge that its uniform standard never lowers.

(* It is a matter of official record that when Sterling Gasoline was originally analyzed to meet the standards required of an ethyl gasoline, it was found to far exceed every specification—showing conclusively that Sterling Gasoline in its content is a real quality fuel. That gasoline is the body of the famous Sterling Ethyl.

This Is the Sign that Identifies It

Wherever you see this emblem—the symbol of the premium fuel that gives the driver of today everything that he desires in a gasoline—drive up and fill up.

It is the logical gasoline for summer—innumerable tests have proven that due to its greater evenness of combustion the engine runs cooler—an important factor in hot weather. Use Sterling Ethyl!
