EDWARD FLANAGAN
Edward James Flanagan, sr., aged 73 years, died of a complication of diseases at his residence at Hastings last midnight. His health had been impaired for the past several years.

The deceased is survived by his widow, Mrs. Mary (O'Day) Flanagan and one son, Edward J., jr., residing in Akron, O. Mr. Flanagan was born in England and had lived in Hastings for the last seven years. He was a member of the Loyal Order of Moose at this place.

Funeral services were held at 9 o'clock Saturday morning in St. Bernard's Catholic Church, with burial in the church cemetery.

LAST FEW YEARS SHOW UNUSUAL PROGRESS IN ROOFING

Great strides forward in solution of the roofing problem have been made in the last few years. No longer does the house owner have to roof with old style inflammable materials, but with asbestos, slate or other fireproof roofings. Not only is this possible, but he may thus equip himself at a moderate expenditure.

From earliest time man has sought for the shelter of a roof over his head. From the thatched roof of the jungle dweller, and the prehistoric stone cover to the shingled security of the modern home represents a long span. Through these years man has accumulated a deal of experience by which he is now beginning to profit.

With the passing of the grass roof and the stone cave, man has, by virtue of his experience, devised a number of roofing materials which give satisfactory service. Slate, tile and asbestos shingles, are all typical of modern construction. Asbestos, itself a rock, embodies all the permanence of those cave dwellings which still exist today.

In the past, a roofing material which was really durable, was more often than not completely out of the financial reach of the average home builder. The Johns-Manville Corporation has developed, in the last few years, an asbestos shingle which is well within the possibilities of even the smallest homes.

Constructed in a hexagonal shape in laying. By the old methods, shingles overlapped to such an extent that the entire roof was covered with at least a double thickness of shingles. But with the Johns-Manville Hexagonal Shingle overlapping has been cut to a minimum, with a consequent great reduction in the amount of roofing material necessary.

A roof so covered possesses manifold advantages quite obscure to the uninitiated. It is absolutely weather-tight, permanently durable, fire-safe, and above all economical to a marked degree. It is indeed fortunate that with all these material advantages we have not only a roof to please the pocket-book, but a roof to delight the eye.

The broken line beauty achieved through the hexagonal method of laying is a pleasant departure from the stiff, straight lined roof to which we are accustomed. To have a roof that is beautiful, that is durable, that is permanent, and that is fire-safe should satisfy the most rigid requirements. To have a roof of Hexagonal Asbestos Shingles is to have all of this, forever.
