An intimate closeup of Mr. Turkey Gobbler, the "National Bird" of America, who will lose his official head, with many other members of his family, to grace the tables of America on Thanksgiving day.

Wild Turkey
Ranked King of the Woods

When Charles the Ninth of France sat down at his wedding banquet in the year 1570, he was probably entirely unaware that something was about to happen to him which had never happened to any other king of France. Perhaps his mother, Catherine de Medici, had knowledge of what was coming, for Catherine was a managing sort of woman and kept a watchful eye on everything that was done or planned in the royal palace. But chefs are an independent tribe, intolerant of interference with their affairs, and possibly only the palace eunuchs and his underlings knew that a rare distinction was about to be conferred upon their exalted master.

History is silent as to these details. The important fact—veuched for by Charles Lucian Bonaparte, the French naturalist—is that Charles the Ninth at his wedding banquet consumed, doubtless with great gusto, liberal portions of a strange new fowl never before eaten in France—a large and extraordinary and very delicious bird known as a "Cock of the Indies."

Thereby Charles the Ninth of France established a precedent. That "Cock of the Indies" was, as a matter of fact, a turkey. No other European king, had ever dined on turkey, and certainly no African or Asiatic potentate had enjoyed that experience. Hence Charles the Ninth's wedding banquet may be set down as one of the turning points of history. Then and there the turkey, noblest of his royal race, came into his own as the king of all table birds, fit provender for monarchs and for presidents.

Wild Gobbler Beautiful Bird.

The man who knows only the domestic turkey, and who has seen that pompous and rather foolish swagger often in the barnyard, may find it a little difficult to understand why the sight of a turkey in the woods always and invariably makes a red-letter day. Let him go hunting wild turkeys—either with or without a gun—and he will understand why. As a matter of fact, the tame turkey of our barnyard and the wild turkey of our woods are two entirely different birds, differing not only in plumage (though in this respect the difference is slight) but also in form, in bearing, in mentality and in personality.

In the wild gobbler, for all his size and weight, there is something of a gamecock's slimmness. His form is powerful and stalwart, yet beautifully molded. His bearing is proud, and confident; yet one sees in him always a half-trigger alertness which accentuates his wildness; and somehow that wildness is apparent in every line and curve of his body. In the poise of his head, in the glance of his eye, in the springiness of his stride. His rich coppery-bronze plumage glows and glints in the sun and in certain lights gleams like burnished gold; and when he is on guard (and it is no easy matter to catch a wild gobbler napping), he holds himself splendidly erect so that his tall form seems amazingly tall and that clean thorough-bred slimmness which distinguishes him delights the eye of the beholder.

There have been times when, fresh from a meeting in the woods with some superb bronze monarch of the sunlit glades, I have almost been ready to agree with old Ben Franklin that the turkey and not the bald eagle should have been chosen as our national symbol.

comes to mind when the turkey is mentioned.

The turkey, whether wild or domestic, belongs not with the martial birds but with the game birds, a much less dashing and aggressive group than the eagles and falcons; and though he is fairly strong and swift on the wing for short distances, his power of flight is as nothing compared with that of the great eagle family. As for physical prowess, the largest turkey gobbler, though far out-weighting the largest eagle, would have no chance in a combat with the latter bird. Not many miles from where this is being written such a combat once took place, though the eagle in this instance was not the bald eagle, our national bird, but a golden eagle. The turkey was already dead and the eagle was feasting on his body when a gunner shot the victor.

Belongs to New World. Nevertheless, though it is probably just as well that Franklin did not have his way, the wild turkey might be regarded as, in some respects at any rate, a logical second choice for the symbol of the United States; and lumping the wild and the domestic fowls together for the moment, the popularity of the turkey as a table delicacy in America and the prominence which it assumes at Thanksgiving and Christmas might well on title it to be called "Our Other National Bird." Hence the history and natural history of the turkey constitute a subject of particular interest, especially in view of the fact that most Americans know very little about this bird which plays a gala part in our gastronomic lives, while a good deal of what they do know about it is not true.

Perhaps the most widespread error concerning the bird is the vague idea shared by thousands of people that the turkey came originally from Turkey. This is an utterly false notion. The turkeys are a distinctively New World family and were entirely unknown until the first explorers crossed the Atlantic. Possibly the turkey owes its misleading name to the habit once prevalent in England of calling every strange and foreign object Turk, Indian, and so forth; or possibly the English of those times saw in the headgear of this bird a resemblance to the headgear worn by the Turks. No one really knows how the name originated and most of the suggestions which have been offered are guesswork.

SIX-HOUR DAY FOR RAILROAD MEN

By A. F. WHITNEY, President B. R. T.

BARRING some unforeseen cataclysm the six-hour day is inevitable in the transportation industry. And I predict that when it comes it will disappoint its critics in the same manner the ten-hour day and the eight-hour day disappointed their predecessors.

The railroads were generally more prosperous during the period the ten-hour day was in effect than under the twelve-hour day, and they have been more prosperous since the establishment of the eight-hour day than they were under the ten-hour day, and the costs of transportation have not mounted disproportionately.

Among the factors directly contributing to prosperity are health, personal efficiency and a generally higher order of morale among transportation workers. Shortening the work day is economically reproductive, resulting in better business conditions. No longer is the worker's leisure a matter of academic human welfare. The vast aggregation of "mass service industries"—for a single example, the entertainment enterprises—find that shorter hours make possible millions of new consumers and patrons. The worker's leisure, therefore, not only enjoys its humanitarian appeal; it is also counted responsible for new business aggregating uncounted millions. The extension of the five-day week until now approximately half a million workers enjoy it, has been no small factor in this new business.

FAULTS IN SCHOOL TRAINING

By DR. WARREN VAN NAME, Brooklyn School Principal.

Get away from fads and teach school children things practical. There is too much teaching, too many devices, too much canned stuff that is only window dressing. Some teachers and supervisors are so intent on a particular liking that they drill the class on an isolated item and fail comprehensively to cover the work of the term as a whole.

A teacher with a good textbook and a thorough knowledge of her subject does not need fantastic plans to train her children. Plenty of reading, writing, reciting and blackboard work without much fuss and running around by the teacher will do all that can be done.

Each teacher should institute a home period once a week. It should be a club period in which the teacher should learn the plans, purposes, traits and ambitions of each pupil.

Let a boy who would make a good lawyer aim to be a policeman if that is what he wants. When the time comes for him to change his plans he will be the better for it. Only aimless pupils are truant, disorderly or careless.

BRITISH RULE IN PALESTINE

By DR. STEPHEN S. WISE, Prominent Zionist.

I do not hold the British government wholly to blame for the recent attacks on the Jews in Palestine by Arab bands and I have faith in that government's desire to protect them from further molestation. When I spoke recently of the British government I did not include the authorities in Palestine, as the latter government is entirely separate, and I would not insult the British government by identifying them with the persons who permitted the slaughter of nearly a hundred of my own people. Certain persons in Palestine who call themselves Christians not only permitted the murderous attacks on defenseless women and children, but were instrumental in creating ill-will on the part of the Arabs.

We must not allow the recent reports of "war" and "massacre" to reduce the emigration to the Jewish homeland. If it does, the Arabs have won.

I would not indict a whole people for what might have been the actions of a comparative few. There were some Arabs who protected the Jewish women and children and opposed the wholesale murders and butcheries.

CLASSICS NOT COLLEGE NEED

By DEAN HERBERT E. HAWKES, Columbia College.

The passing of the Greek and Latin classics as required studies has not weakened the cultural background of American college students. The new method of wide survey in all departments has great advantages for the average college student over the old system of intense concentration in a single field.

Unless I am greatly mistaken there is as large a percentage of our able students today who gain the results that the classics were supposed to furnish as there were when these subjects were required of all. Unfortunately they do not usually gain it through the medium of the classical languages, but it comes nevertheless.

If a given college imposes requirements for its degree that demand a high degree of specialization with the scholar's devotion, that college must either be certain that all of the students are of the scholar's temperament or look forward to a sad slaughter of those who are admitted to college but who do not possess this quality, or else in the course of a few years expect a gradual tempering of the wind to the shorn lamb.

BASIC LAW MADE CRIME AID

By RALPH F. LESEMAN, St. Louis (Asst. U. S. Attorney).

There is a conflict today between violation of the bills of rights, and encouragement of crime. There is a criminal organization as hierarchical as the national government and often more highly organized. They are counseled by men with a knowledge of the law, who use the rights guaranteed by the Constitution in the defense of crime.

The right to have our homes protected from unwarranted search, the right to a fair hearing and a trial by jury, are fundamental and innate, but they can be abused. The criminal uses his home as a shield under the cloak of Constitutional guarantees. He protects himself with technicalities created by the courts and the legislatures, which are not themselves part of the Constitution, but which the Constitution says must be enforced as long as they remain on the statute books. Many of these are rights which are not a part of the basic law and which can and should be changed.

Raisins Fed to Cattle

Cattle feeders are buying raisins from the Fresno (Calif.) district for feeding cows, hogs and sheep on the basis of $16 a ton. Records show the raisins have fully this value as feed. On former tests, it is said, the raisins were of such poor quality that feeders were discouraged, but when a better quality was tried good results were obtained. If a large enough demand is created it is thought that the average market price can be brought up by this use of surplus raisins.—Capper's Weekly.

Girl Fights Big Handicap

MANY a girl would give up in despair when she found herself snubbed in school and unpopular in college, but not so Mrs. Norma Kussel Jones of 1567 Cramer Street, Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

"When I was seventeen I went away to college," says Mrs. Jones. "Freda, my room-mate, was a very popular girl. Soon she asked to have her room changed. It seems I kept her awake at night, I slept so restlessly. No one knows how I suffered.

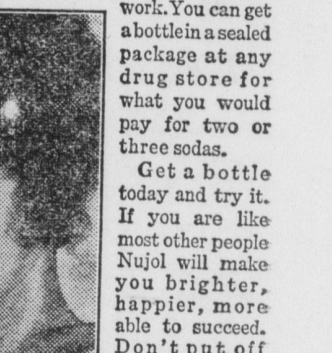

"One day one of my teachers found me sobbing. 'Why,' she said, 'sometimes sluggish circulation causes restless sleep. Why don't you try Nujol?'"

"In two weeks Nujol had begun clearing out the poisons in my body, my skin had a clear healthy appearance, and everything looked brighter. 'What have you been doing to yourself?' asked my room-mate. 'You are a different girl!' The days and years that followed were filled with every activity and not long ago Freda was maid of honor at my wedding. That's what Nujol did for me!"

Such a simple way to health and happiness! Your doctor will tell you that Nujol contains no medicines or drugs—it is simply bodily lubrication—harmless, normal, and it works easily so you will be regular as clockwork.
