A MOCK MARRIAGE AND THE

REAL THING ((C) by D. J. Walsh.)

THE PATTON COURIER

For four years Jack and Elaine had been in love. At least, that was the general opinion in the clique in which they entertained and were entertained. And that fact ulation, for they were the only couple cruel and threatened to kill her on in the seven which composed the more than one occasion. He was $90' "gang" who were not married.

The girls, who were all young enough to be referred to in the social columns as "nee," were inclined to ceded as one that he was mid-Victorian in many of his ideas; that he regarded the woman's place as in the home, and felt that he should accumulate his "stake" before burdening himself with the shackles of matrimony and the attendant responsibilities. They were sorry for Elaine, without committing themselves by making a statement of that fact. The men were more frank in their criticism. "If I had a girl like Elaine eating her heart out for me," declared Folwell to the group of four who sat languidly on the veranda of the coun-try club, "you can bet it wouldn't take me more than ten minutes to give the license bureau the grand rush. It is a pity he doesn't see it.'

"Oh, he sees it, all right," retorted Bill Grimes, "and then, again, there may be another side to the story. She hes a great many responsibilities. you know. She has a great sense of re-sponsibility toward her mother. I've known Elaine for seventeen years. We grew up together and I under-stand her pretty thoroughly. She is rather independent and I don't think she cares a rap for the idea of be-coming a burden on any man. Yes, I think there's another side to the story." "Well, I'd like to see it. There doesn't seem to be any justice in a wonderful couple like that going their individual ways when they could be so happily married." "If you fellows want to see them married so badly," interrupted Lorimer, who had been smoking quietly as if in deep thought, "you might refer the matter to Bill Prescott. He's a sort of cure-all and life of the party for this gang, of though I didn't like the last practical joke he pulled on me, I think he's a pretty good organ-izer. Why don't you get him to open little bag of tricks?" 'There's Prescott now, digging up turf on the links. Call him over, He'd be glad for a legitimate excuse to get himself out of that sand trap." Prescott came on the run in answer to their call.

"Have you seen Jack Day around any place?" he was asked. "Yeah," he exclaimed, "left this ower of flowers. Their wraps were taken from them, and, flanked by Lorimer and his wife, Jack and Elaine were led into another room, which was arranged, even in detail, to look like a small chapel. At the other end of the room stood a minister. Jack and Elaine looked at each other with startled expressions. Then they smiled at each other and in their smiles was a note of acquiencence. They marched up to the minister and, without a tremor in the voice of either, pronounced the mock marriage ceremony after the mock minister. This was the unexpected, and it showed plainly in the dumbfounded expressions of the audience. Prescott retrieved the situation by gesticultaing wildly for silence and telling them by pantomime to follow his lead.

The mock ceremony was over and the bride and groom turned to receive the congratulations of their friends, but no one stirred. The joke had gone too far. There seemed no alternative but to disillusion the young couple and to confess the complicity of every one in the hoax. Prescott stepped forward to explain.

Before he could speak, Jack Day touched him on the shoulder. "Just a minute, Bill," he exclaimed, "I have something to say."

He turned to the crowd with an odd smile playing about the corners of his mouth.

"Elaine and I want to thank you for arranging this little surprise for us," he said; "we certainly appreciate We feel that it's the next best thing to being married at home, and it was thoughtful of you. But what we can't understand is this: How did you know about it so soon? We were married only yesterday in New York."

Letter Writing by Men

Seems to Be Lost Art Not one man in a million can write a satisfactory letter to his wife, according to William Feather, Cleveland philosopher and syndicated analyst of human nature. Probably he meant to declare that few men are able to write an interesting letter, that men, in fact, are poor letter writers. If that is his position we can join him.

In earlier days in this country letters were not numerous, but they were real letters. Some recent biographies have contained letters that were magnificent, written merely to convey in formation or carry on a discussion with a relative or friend. Today one may telegraph, or use the telephone, or dictate a note. Few men give up the time necessary to prepare a newsy letter, with a bit of sentiment, even to the wife who is away on vacation.

Women are good letter writers, according to Dr. Roy Davis of Boston university, who made a study of letters written by groups of professional men and women. In comparison he said the women were far out in the lead. Women are able to get the per-sonal note and touch in a letter, some thing men do not even try to accom plish. And a letter from a near friend. relative or member of one's own family, that has no personal note in it, must be scored low; it leaves much to be desired. About the only kind of good letter writing done by men is by a few specialists who are in the mail order business and handle the followup letters .- Ohio State Journal.

PUBLISHERS PROTECT PUBLIC

By W. E. HUMPHREYS, Federal Trade Commission.

Publishers throughout the country are to be credited with responsibility for the success of the campaign of the federal trade commission against fraudulent advertising. In the last six months, according to figures I have gathered, publishers have rejected not less than $100,000,000 worth of questionable advertising. As a result, the public has been protected from being robbed of not less than $150,000,000.

The press in this matter has rendered a great public service. I believe that within a year the advertising columns of publications will be practically free of that class of advertisements that are plainly false.

But whether it takes a year or ten years, or however long it may take, the fight is going to continue until these fakers and crooks and scoundrels who live by robbing the unwary and unfortunate are put out of business. In this undertaking we have the support of every honest publisher in America. We have the support of every honest advertising agency in America. We believe that we have the support of every honest and decent American citizen.
