Today—the purr of smoothly

The three musketeers of history rode stirrup to stirrup, their blades a flashing, impenetrable wall of steel. Opposition was swept before them, for they were the best swordsmen and the bravest fighters in the service of the King.

Modern roads are not beset with dangers that require sword play. But mileage and hills and the demands of traffic demand that a motor use the best gasolines and oil procurable. The experience of drivers over years has won this name for these three Sterling products—the Three Musketeers of Motordom. For no odds are too great when these three ride the highway in the service of their master, the automobile driver.
