

LONGER SKIRTS CROONING ALTER DANCING STYLE

Additional Grace Seen for Ballroom Due to Changed Public Taste

The popular terpsichore is undergoing a reform, according to a consensus of opinion among Cleveland dancing instructors.

The American dance hall, which for years has been the scene of the Charleston, the Black Bottom, the Bob-bly Jones, the Bunny Hug and others of similar character but more recent origin, will soon have witnessed a complete transformation that will bring back dances, swaying, graceful movements, forgotten during the heyday of King Jaz, teachers say. Already the transformation has begun with dance hall habitués doing a shuffling, aimless routine much unlike that of its recent predecessors. This uncertainty of movement is interpreted as a wavering on the part of young America to adhere to the old steps or to develop new ones along similar lines. The shuffling routine, in turn, is predicted to succumb to a new one which will be bred in grace, symmetry, and a certain air of statelyness, instructors aver.

New modes of dress and the growing popularity of the ballad are ascribed as responsible for the change. According to Walter U. Soby, Secretary-Treasurer of the Dancing Masters of America, long skirts assume the credit.

"When the flappers first put on long skirts last fall," Soby opines, "they tried to cavort just as they had with short skirts. They galloped around the dance floors and that wasn't becoming in long dress. The girls didn't look cute. Cutting-up in short skirts and boyish form silhouettes was a different proposition. Pretty soon the brightest girls began to catch on. They realized that to make the exciting new styles effective, they would have to change their manners."

The growing popularity of crooning through the medium of the radio, wrought an effect upon dancing, as well as new staidness in dress, in the belief of Miss Margaret Gibbons, principal of the Ohio Dancing Teachers Association.

"Crooning has very slow rhythm," is the way she explains it. "It's soft and sentimental. Strangleholds and the galloping just do not match up with it. With the long dresses to make the girls look dignified and sweet and music to make them feel that way, the rough-handed gyrating sheiks have been forced out of fashion."

Amos-Andy Sign New Contract for Five Years More; Get $75,000 Raise

Freeman Gosden and Charles J. Correll have signed a new radio contract said to call for more than a million dollars salary in five years.

Gosden and Correll—but maybe it would be better to refer to them as Amos 'n' Andy—thus have reached a high pinnacle in broadcasting in a little more than six years.

Announcement of the new contract followed closely upon reports that their first year on the National Broadcasting company chain had been so successful that they would be extended until 1931. Now the time has been extended with a salary said to average $200,000 a year on a sliding scale.

It was in 1925 that the two got their particular idea of producing radio laughs. They tried it out first on WGIN as Sam 'n' Henry, then went on WMAQ as Amos 'n' Andy, and finally attracted attention of chain officials.

The new salary will give them about $75,000 a year raise, it is believed.

MISS IRENE SCHIRFF IS BRIDE OF R. A. MANGOLD

Pretty Ceremony Held in St. Benedict's Church Carrolltown, Last Week

Miss Irene Schirff, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Schirff, and Raymond A. Mangold, both of Carrolltown, were married at 9 o'clock Thursday morning in St. Benedict's Catholic church at solemn nuptial high mass celebrated by the Rev. Father Thomas Wolf, O. S. B., pastor, assisted by the Rev. Father Williams, O. S. B., and the Rev. Father Berthold, O. S. B. The high altar was decorated with garden flowers and music for the mass was sung by the church choir, with Miss Clara Glasser presiding at the organ. Miss Coletta Luther, violinist, assisted in the orchestration. Mrs. Raymond A. Lacey, soprano, and Miss Mary, alto, rendered Rosewig's "Ave Maria." During the ceremony, Miss Glasser and Miss Luther played "O Promise Me" in subdued tones.

The bride was attired in a princess gown of white satin, her tulle veil with a train being caught with orange blossoms. She carried a bridal bouquet of Sweet heart roses. The bridesmaid, Miss Helen Schirff, wore an orchid satin gown with accessories to match. Leo Wirtner of Washington, D. C., cousin of the bridegroom, was best man.

The bride is a graduate of the school of nursing of Mercy hospital, Pittsburgh. Mr. Mangold is employed by the Penn Central Light and Power Co. Upon their return from a trip to Canada, the couple will reside at Carrolltown.

TELLS PROTECTORS TO "BE ON GUARD"

Recent experiences of game protectors who were attempting to break up rings of illegal deer hunters have caused Game Commission officials to warn their men to protect their own lives at any cost.

Several attempts of violators who tried to run down uniformed game protectors instead of halting as directed has necessitated adoption of drastic self-protection measures, officials said.

In one instance reported from Lycoming county Deputy Fred Clark was knocked down and run over by an automobile driven by two men who had been detected shooting deer illegally. Although badly injured Clark drew his revolver and emptied it after the fleeing car, wounding one of the men.

Two Clinton county protectors were able to stop the fleeing car of two violators in the rear tires. The captured violators were charged with hunting out of season and using illegal devices. A rifle, spotlight and batteries for its operation were confiscated.

Because of the character of the men who make a practice of "jack-lighting" deer the game protectors on patrol in the deer country have been assigned in groups of from two to six.

In addition to the usual violations of the deer laws the protectors have been working to break up well organized rings who kill the deer illegally and market the meat in distant cities. Protectors have been instructed to be equally vigilant in detecting the buyers as well as the sellers of venison.

RAIN WILL BE AID TO BASS FISHERMEN

Several days of rain early in the present month should make September and early October ideal for the bass fishing in all streams where they are found, N. R. Buller, commissioner of fisheries, said yesterday.

Reports to the Commission from the larger streams indicated many good catches despite the unusually low water.

Like reports also were received from several lakes which boast good bass fishing, especially Lake Wallenpaupack in northeastern Pennsylvania.

BILLY ARNOLD WINS SPEEDWAY CLASSIC

His brow drawn in a troubled frown, unlike the debonair speedster of former days, Billy Arnold, Chicago's ace of the oil-streaked pathway, flashed under the checkered flag at the Tipton-bowl Altoona, Monday in a swelter of rain-drops, to clinch victory in the Labor day classic of the Altoona speedway and the championship of the American Automobile association.

Until the ninety-third lap, when the race was stopped because of intermittent showers that befogged drivers' goggles and made the roaring boards thrice perilous, the Labor day race was a trial of skill between the meteoric Arnold and the veteran Deacon Litz of DuBois. The event was scheduled for 200 miles.

No serious accidents marred the flight of the droning steel monsters toward the checkered flag, although twice the crowd was brought breathless to its feet, once as Phil Fardee, Los Angeles, crashed and tumbled on the gateful east turn after a blowout, and again as Deacon Litz's speeding Duesenberg whirled in the dust a few feet farther on, narrowly averting a serious crash.

It was deacon's second narrow escape in the thrilling duel with Arnold that injected a spirit of oldtime rivalry into the classic and brought back memories of the Miltons and Murphy's of former days.

As a result of his triumph, he increased his point total for the 1930 racing season to 1027, effectively outdistancing his only rival, Shorty Cantlon Akron driver, whose total was increased to 884, and receiving assurance of the A. A. A. title from Ted Allen, secretary of the contest board. Should Cantlon win the only remaining event at Syracuse next Saturday, he would still be unable to supersede the inimitable Arnold.
