CARROLLTOWN BARBER, 81, CELEBRATES LONG RECORD IN PROFESSION

The following story, taken from the Johnstown Tribune of last Friday evening, is self-explanatory:

Carrolltown.—Otto Glasser, Carrolltown's first and only barber, today observed his 81st birthday anniversary by putting in another day's work at his shop, which is perhaps the most curious in Pennsylvania.

Instead of having one modern clock in his barber shop, Otto Glasser has fourteen antique models, all of which he keeps in working order. Collecting and repairing old clocks is his hobby and he has an ancient model in a back room which is 200 years old.

Glasser first came to Carrolltown from Pittsburgh in 1876 with a watchmaker named Alec Dink. His father, Christ Glasser, had been a barber in Pittsburgh for many years, and it was in this shop on Carson street that young Glasser started learning the barber trade at the age of nine. By the time he was 17 he was a full fledged barber in his father's shop. But Alec Dink interested him in watchmaking and offered to teach him the trade if he would go to Carrolltown with him.

The town didn't have any barber, Dink told him, and he could cut hair while he was learning to repair broken watches and clocks. And so the pair came to Carrolltown and Glasser opened his barber shop.

Those were the days when a shave and hair cut were really "two-bits." (Hair cuts 15c, and shaves a dime) and when barbers did such other things as extract teeth, treat infected wounds and conduct a sort of dispensary.

Glasser's first week in Carrolltown netted him only $1.50, which wasn't enough to pay for his room and board. However he was the only barber in the little town of 400 inhabitants and they induced him to stay. The second week he made $2.50 and this time decided definitely to leave.

However, a customer named Billy Noel offered to board Glasser for $4.00 a month if he would build four stove fires, feed and milk the cow, tend the horse and do other chores of the farm.

By accepting the offer he cast the die that kept him as a Carrolltown barber for the rest of his life. Some time later another customer, Dr. Oatman, told him to do the same chores at his home and he would not have to pay any board. To keep the peace young Glasser did the work for both men.

He was especially popular in these early days because he played the guitar and the violin and he was heavily in demand for barn dances. Other odd jobs included paper hanging and jobs in breweries.

Oddly enough the first Carrolltown man whose hair he cut was named Glass and the second Beer. Years later an Altoona writer composed a poem based on this unusual coincidence.

Otto Glasser believes he is Pennsylvania's oldest and longest practicing barber. He has worked continuously at the trade for 63 years. Some of his customers have been coming to his shop for more than 50 years. One of these was Time Luther who came to Glasser's shop for a shave and hair cut August 15, 1930, on his fiftieth wedding anniversary. Glasser had done the same job for Luther fifty years earlier on the day he was married. He also had played the guitar at Luther's wedding dance, and he repeated in 1930 by playing at the anniversary.

He served two state governors in his time. The first was Gov. Robert

E. Pattison, whose term was from 1890 to 1894. The other was Governor Daniel H. Hastings who succeeded Pattison. Governor Hastings was the man who opened the coal fields at the town of Hastings and for whom the town is named. Hastings was a steady customer of Glasser until his death. Even though he spent a great deal of time in New York and Washington he often returned to Carrolltown and while here would stop for a hair cut.

In fact Otto Glasser has cut so many heads of hair that he has worn out the floor beside the barber chair three times. He jokes a great deal about this and laughingly remarks that sugar maple is much better than hemlock for its wearing quality.

On May 16, 1892, he married Catherine Blum, daughter of Henry and Barbara (Schroth) Blum of Carrolltown, and they have one daughter, Clara.

All his life Mr. Glasser has retained his interest in clocks. His collection includes several rare models. One of them is more than 200 years old. It was believed to have been imported from Germany. Other models include old weight clocks, early cuckoo clocks, some of the world's first spring models and a few of the first alarm clocks.

Fourteen of these Glasser keeps in the barber shop. The most highly prized, however, are in the back room where he takes only those he really believes to be interested. All of these clocks are in working order. If they were broken when he got them, he repaired them.

"I made them all run," he exclaims proudly. His collection is as good or better than those of most museums, he believes. Time after time he has been offered tidy sums for his clocks but thus far he has turned down all offers.

Otto Glasser is 81 today, but he doesn't look it. His hand is as steady as ever and he doesn't need glasses.

Harrisburg.—The Bureau of Parks in the Department of Forests and Waters announces that tenting areas will be available in Pennsylvania's recreational areas and in designated areas within the state forests.
