

'Reveille'

By GRAHAM SAUNDERS
(Released by Associated Newspapers
WNU Service.)

HE WAS just a private, Drusilla noticed, as he lounged easily into the drug store and draped his tall form against a pillar, waiting attention; but she had to admit reluctantly that he was the handsomest man she had ever seen in all her 26 years. And the daughter of a small-town druggist is likely to see quite a few men in ten years of clerk subbing.

With infinite patience Drusilla helped old Mrs. Gordon select a new face powder, some new rouge and several other articles of makeup suitable for a 16-year-old flapper, and when the 60-year-old devotee of the modernists had departed she came quietly up to the tall soldier and asked him what he wanted.

"Gosh, sister," he confided in a tone that would have been fresh in another, "all I want just this minute is to feast my eyes on you. I guess I know, now, why I stayed single so long!" Drusilla laughed merrily and then said: "Our ice-cream sodas are refreshing, uh, to the memory as well as otherwise!" and he lounged over to the fountain.

Later he discovered that he needed a toothbrush, some shaving cream, shampoo, a special face soap and a box of chocolates. The latter was the cause of their better acquaintance, as he selected a rather inferior brand in a very plain wrapper and after a swift glance she said: "These are very fine. I buy them myself, and the box is sure to please even the most fastidious girl! You know," she added naively, "so many of us like to keep the ribbons as reminders!"

"Uh—thanks for the tip. I'm a stick in the mud. Have you a large collection of ribbons?"

"Not too many; none that has any especial sentimental attraction, if that's what you mean," she retorted.

Later—it must have been six in the evening—she looked up as the last customer of a rush crowd cleared from the store, and Drusilla was startled to note the large white-wrapped box on the soda fountain table. With a strange thrill she picked it up and saw lettered neatly in one corner her name, and the strange premonition that it was from the tall soldier proved correct, and she paused an instant to ponder how he could have discovered her name.

Opening the package, Drusilla knew a strange thrill as she read the scrawled note within. If she could overcome her scruples against a common soldier on a common private's pay, would she meet him outside the shop at closing time and go canoeing with him? If she would! And Drusilla's eyes shone and her face glowed all the evening until her father finished putting up prescriptions and came out to relieve her. She walked on air as she ran to powder her nose and she laughed shakily as she removed the ribbon from the chocolate box and pinned it with the tiny crescent diamond pin to the front of her dress at the collar. And tucking the box of chocolates under her arm, she went out to the street.

He stood in the shadows, close to her father's shop, and his curly black head was bare as he came eagerly forward to greet her. Ardent admiration shone in his blue eyes as he took her box and touched her elbow lightly, piloted her across town by the big, dimly lit library and down to the river where the bathhouses and canoes were.

Later, as they drifted along under the sweeping willow branches, he hummed, and then at her urging sang in a fine baritone the exquisite words and music to "Girl of My Dreams," and then fell strangely silent. "Why so silent?" she teased, and he answered honestly, "Afraid your boss wouldn't let you off, Miss Dexter!" and she knew a guilty, glad thrill; he didn't know she was the only daughter and heiress to the Dexter drug stores—didn't guess she would one day inherit the fortune made by the famous "Bix-el" drugs! And then they talked and talked and talked.

"Do you truly have to wait for some one to die for promotion, Terry?" for they had become Terry and Drusilla in four hours of magic moonlight and no hours!

"Uh, regular soldiers have to wait in line, advancement—but I'll never hate reveille any more!" he ended eloquently as he beached the craft skillfully.

"Why?" she asked softly as he helped her ashore.

"Because I've heard it for the last time, the real reveille, the awakening to life and love and ambition! From now on I'm a civvie, hustling for regular promotion!"

"You mean you'll quit the army and go into business?" she asked.

"Yup," he answered joyously, "got to hustle now if I'm going to win the one girl!"

"What will you do?" she asked faintly.

"Sell bonds and make love to you," he said exultantly.

"Do you have to?" she asked softly against the rough tan of his coat as she burrowed her nose deeper into the cigar-scented wool.

"You don't answer reveille but once, darling," he said, tipping her face up to kiss her tenderly. "Once you're awake you stay awake."

Children? Dictators Just Love Them

'DEAD END KIDS' COMING TO THE GRAND THEATRE IN PATTON, SUNDAY, ONE DAY

More sympathetically presented than they have ever been before, the "Dead End Kids" are the central characters of "Hell's Kitchen," the Warner Bros. picture coming to the Grand Theatre in Patton on Sunday—matinee and evening.

The story is also unusual in that it includes as a foil for the boisterous youngsters an adult character who is in effect just such a kid grown much older, much wiser and much tougher. This character is played by Stanley Fields. The other leading roles are taken by Margaret Lindsay, Ronald Reagan, Grant Mitchell and Frankie Burke, the erstwhile Cagney impersonator being in this instance added to the "Dead End" gang.

In a series of absorbing sequences which range from the luridly melodramatic to the hilariously humorous, the picture tells of the regeneration of the tuggish racketeer played by Fields as a result of the sympathy aroused by him by the tough but essentially good inmates of a shelter home for boys.

The boys, leaders among who are depicted by the "Dead Enders," are just such kids as Fields realizes he was

Predicts Labor Peace

Washington.—William Green, president of the A. F. of L., and John L. Lewis, head of the C. I. O., now at loggerheads, some day will shake hands, their unions will be merged and the labor movement will continue to go forward, Senator Elbert Thomas, Democrat of Utah, forecast the other day.

himself as a youngster. They are half starved and brutally treated and eventually they revolt against their intolerable lot.

Fields original interest in the shelter home has been that of a racketeer who has just come across something from which he can make some money but it hasn't taken long for the boys to arouse in him a rough but genuine paternal interest. And he proves this effectively when he voluntarily surrenders himself for a prison term just so that he can help in defending and exonerating the boys from the consequences of their revolt.
