entifies the trouble with the leader and not with the particular employee for whom the leader has been requested to intervene. The more audiences the chairman has with this boss, the greater will be the friction arising between them. In my experience, in the field of labor relations, I have often witnessed the 'sacrifice' of the plant union leader. There often arises the belief that if a certain plant union leader would be disposed of, labor troubles would be eliminated.

"From the inferences arising out of the testimony in this case, from the demeanor and tenor of some of the witnesses appearing in behalf of the company, I find that Edward Haley was dismissed not because of some complaint about his work, but because he was considered the cancer from which arose whatever labor troubles the company had experienced. However, it does appear that the labor troubles which had arisen from time to time, had been unnatural. As long as men are men differences of opinion and motives will exist. And as long as men are men these differences can and should be adjusted amicably as evidently they have been up to the present controversy by the Home Baking Co., with its employees.

"For two years and a half Haley had been identified as the head of the grievance committee. During this entire period he has had the task of putting on the carpet the individual and collective troubles and complaints of his fellow workers. The seed of discontent was planted two and one-half years ago, when, because of the efforts of this employee, the right of collective bargaining was recognized by the Home Baking Company. From that seed has arisen the weed of this controversy.

"My findings have been that Edward Haley was primarily dismissed because of his union activities, I am compelled to dissent from the majority opinion."
