June is the first month of the year in which production has failed to establish a new high record. Reports indicate a more rapid seasonal curtailment in hatchery operations this year than in 1938.

Egg Production Higher

In contrast to the large increase in commercial hatchings, the number of young chickens per farm flock on July 1 was less than 3 per cent above 1938 the report stated.

Total production of eggs per farm flock continues slightly above last year, the lower production per hen being more than offset by the large number of layers. Prices continue from two to three cents per dozen below last year. The feed ratio, based on Chicago prices, continues much less favorable for farmers than a year earlier, but is more favorable than the 1928-37 average.
