A breezy mystery film with lots of gags, thrills and breath-taking adventure will play at the Grand Theatre in Patton Friday and Saturday. "Nine Lives Are Not Enough" tells the vivid story of a big-time reporter who sets out to track down one of the underworld's most dangerous killers.

KEYSTONE AIRPORT NEWS

Mr. C. B. Colby, editor, says in the introduction to the "Air Trails Annual" that: "The world moves on, but aviation flies ahead! Now more than ever is aviation a by-word, made so by the paramount place in armed conflict now held by air-borne troops and aerial conflict. American aviation is suddenly marching ahead with the strides of a colossus to a destination far in advance of all others. American youth, through Federal sponsorship, may now grow wings to compete with the best of those from across the seas, and as loyal Americans it is our duty to assure them of strong and unflinching support."

Major-Gen. H. H. Arnold, Deputy Chief of Staff for "Air," says in an article entitled "Tomorrow's Air Might" that: "The United States possesses the largest pool of possible airmen of any nation. It has been estimated by our recruiting service that there are about 800,000 men in this country possessing the requisite degree of education, the characteristics and physical set-up fitting them for flying training, and who are in the proper age bracket, from twenty to twenty-six years. "Probably one-half of these can be trained as gunners, navigators, or in some one of the other functions of the combat airman. There is not another nation in the world, including Germany or Great Britain, which can produce more than half this figure, employing the same standards. We have, therefore, the manpower for the world's predominant air force. "The nation which would survive in these times must provide sufficient airpower to gain and to maintain air superiority in any theatre which it would control. "The security of our nation demands that we build without delay the strongest air force in the world." You can plan on flying in winter just as in any other season. In some ways it is even better. For instance, the air is cooler, thereby giving more power to the engine and more lift for the same angle of attack. There is less turbulence and the visibility is likely to be better. At the Keystone airport planes will be equipped with skills so that flying practice can be continued throughout the winter. "Keep Them Flying" for National Defense.
