THE WAGE - HOUR LAW

Explanation of Provisions of the Act in Weekly Installments

Computing Overtime Rates of Pay for Hour and Piece Workers. The regular hourly rate of pay is the agreed hourly rate plus any production bonus earned in that week divided by the number of hours worked. Overtime is based on the regular hourly rate. Example: Harry Harper is paid 60 cents an hour plus a production bonus of 10 cents for a week of 48 hours. His regular earnings at straight time are $36.00 (48 x 60 cents). His overtime earnings at 1 1/2 times the regular rate of 90 cents (120.75 divided by 48 hours). Thus, the additional sum to be paid for each hour over 40 cents is 31 cents, and the total legal amount due him with overtime is $52.24 (48 x 42 plus 8 x 31).

Where a worker is paid on a piece work basis, the regular rate of pay is the piece work earnings for the week plus any production bonus payment, divided by the hours worked. Piece workers must be paid time and one-half for over time. Example: Louise Lake is paid a piece rate which netted her $13.26 in a week of 48 hours. She was paid a production bonus of $1.90. Her hourly rate is 31 cents ($14.26 divided by 46 hours). Her legal earnings for the week total $15.19 ($14.26 plus 6 x 15 1/2).

If the piece worker does not earn the equal of 30 cents an hour, the employer must make up the difference. Example: Janet Jones' earnings for a 48 hour week, including a production bonus, are $10.85. She should have received $13.60 (48 x 28 plus 6 x 15), so her employer must pay her the difference to comply with the Act. (Additional information may be obtained by writing or calling at the office of the Wage and Hour Division, U. S. Department of Labor, at 1225 Widener Building, Philadelphia, or at 236 Old Post Office Building, Pittsburgh.)

TWO THOUSAND MILES OF ELECTRIC LINES ARE STRUNG BY THE REA
