Wartime Traffic on State Roads Being Surveyed
The Highway Planning Division of the Pennsylvania Department of Highways is conducting a survey to determine war time changes in truck traffic volume and weights, Secretary John U. Shroyer, announced this week.

"This survey is being made in order to determine the logical priorities of improvement of the specific projects on the highway system, and also to form the basis for the designing of each project to meet anticipated traffic requirements," Shroyer said.

In explaining the methods of procedure, Mr. Shroyer said the survey involves an eight-hour check of the traffic at each of the 14 stations located at various points throughout the state, and is being made by two field parties each consisting of a chief of party, recorder, three men from the local maintenance organization, and two state policemen. The state police assist in the loadometer operation and in directing traffic at each station. At these stations trucks are weighed by means of portable loadometers which are placed under the truck wheels on one side only.

In addition to weighing the trucks, a traffic count is taken covering all types of vehicles passing each station.

The volume and character of traffic determines the width and number of traffic lanes for which the project is to be designed. Where the truck traffic is considerable the width of the traffic lanes must be made wider than for a section of highway where the traffic is predominantly passenger car traffic. The weight of traffic determines the thickness of the roadway pavement, therefore where the truck weights are heavy the thickness of the pavement is designed accordingly.

The assumed speed of traffic also influences the design of a roadway project. For high speed traffic sharp curves must be avoided and a longer sight distance provided, and the width of traffic lanes made wider than the normal lane. "Furthermore," Mr. Shroyer explained, "the design of a roadway project is based on estimated future traffic, and in this way provision is made so that the improvement will have sufficient capacity to serve the traffic needs through its life."

The Department of Highways has collected an invaluable amount of traffic data on practically all roads in the state, including state highway and local roads outside of boroughs and cities.

Automatic traffic recorders also have been placed at thirty points and operate on the principle of the electric eye. Two parallel beams of light approximately 30 inches apart are directed across the roadway upon photoelectric cells. A passing vehicle interrupts the light beams and this in turn operates the automatic recorder. The machines are designed to count as many as 24,000 motor vehicles per hour. The recorder mechanism prints on standard adding machine tape once every hour, recording the day, hour and minute, and the accumulated traffic total.
