Rural Telephone Service

AFTER THE WAR

For more than half a century the telephone has served the farmer well ... in emergencies ... in more pleasant living.
In years to come it will serve him even better; and the growth of rural telephone service will continue to expand in the rural areas we serve.
Meanwhile, we're waiting for one thing: The green light on production for civilian needs.

STATE PLANS FOR BIG PUBLIC WORKS PROGRAM AT ONCE

Harrisburg.—Public works projects totaling $1,420,000 in cost have been suggested by the State Planning Board for construction in the year ahead, Francis A. Pitkin, executive director, said during the week.
These include, he said, Governor Martin's $176,000,000 program to make "Pennsylvania a better place in which to work and live" for which funds have already been appropriated and $727,000,000 in proposed projects to be financed by local communities.
"Most all are ideas," declared Pitkin. "Some of them may never be built because they represent wishful thinking. On the other hand, projects like the clean-up of the Schuylkill river, for which $5,000,000 has already been allocated by the state, could be started at once because no critical materials are involved."
Pitkin estimated many more jobs will be needed in peacetime than at the war time peak of employment and urged local communities to speed up plans for essential projects such as schools, municipal buildings and sewage and water works.
Pitkin said that all the suggest-

SOME OUT OF JOBS FACE INDUCTION

The "very few" draft registrants in the 18-25 age group who have lost highly specialized war jobs since Japan surrendered, now are facing induction if they meet the physical requirements, selective service headquarters at Harrisburg, states.
"If they are under 26 and they are not employed, of course they are liable to induction," stated Lt. Col. Clarence M. Hartman, state director.
It is the responsibility of both registrants and employers under the selective service act to keep ed plans will take years to complete.

local draft boards informed of the employment status of this age group, he added.
The number affected, Hartman said, will be very small since registrants under 26 "have been screened out many times" and only those with highly specialized skills retained deferments even before the war's end.
These, selective service headquarters explained, included young men who were working on the atomic bomb, or "Manhattan project," and other highly specialized chemists and engineers working on government research.
Deferment for the physically fit in this age group is now virtually non-existent outside of the 2-C or farm classification, since very few registrants under 26 have the experience or skill to entitle them to deferment, headquarters added.
