Lessons of War on Fire Fighting Help in Peace

WASHINGTON, D. C. — Fire fighting techniques developed by the navy during the war may revolutionize postwar civilian fire fighting organizations. Naval methods were credited with saving uncounted lives and millions of dollars' worth of property, including such vessels as the aircraft carrier Franklin, Bunker Hill, Saratoga and Ticonderoga. The navy said recently that the practical results of its techniques promise to save billions of dollars for property owners in years to come. All applicable details of its equipment and methods, the navy said, will be given freely to civil fire departments, industrial firms, fire protection and insurance organizations. Already a large percentage of the members of the Boston fire department has been trained in navy methods. In addition to fog nozzles and foam, navy developments include a portable oxyacetylene cutting outfit, permitting quick cutting through of steel decks and bulkheads, and an oxygen rescue breathing apparatus which generates its own oxygen and removes impurities from exhaled air.
