YOUR HEALTH

From the Medical Society of the State of Pennsylvania and the Cambria Co. Medical Society

Treatment for sprained ankles has changed in recent years. That early use of the ankle in weight-bearing reduces the period of disability is now accepted.

But good ankle support is important in weight-bearing process. The support principle is based on the fact that a heavy shoe such as the military boot is a good splint in itself.

By the addition of felt pads to the inside of the boot, the supporting qualities are increased. After the pads are properly applied, the boot is laced tightly up to the top.

The patient is instructed to walk 500 yards and to return for any adjustments that may be required. It has been surprising to Naval medical officers applying this principle to ankle sprains during the war, to note that many returning from this trial walk no longer limp.

Most of the patients with ankle sprain were ready for light duty in 48 hours.

They were instructed to wear the pads in their boots for at least 21 days and to return only if they should have further trouble.

About 20% of the patients returned, but it was found in these cases that their boots had not been laced tightly enough.

On the whole, according to members of the Medical Corps of the Navy, the injured men were returned to duty immediately.

FARM CALENDAR

Timely Reminders from Pennsylvania State College School of Agriculture

New Varieties Excel
New crop varieties developed for definite purposes—better yield, resistance to disease, and in some instances, better standability—offer decided advantages over old, or the standard varieties, extension agronomists of Penn State say. New and better varieties now in general use in the state, largely as a result of extension demonstrations, include Vicland oats, Thorne wheat, Wong and other barley varieties, and hybrid corn.

Legband Breeder Pullets
Careful studies of the individual birds in a pullet flock at regular intervals and the use of leg bands to mark undesirable birds, provides an easy and satisfactory method for selecting good breeder birds, points out Harry H. Hoffman, the extension poultry specialist at Penn State College.

Remove Blight Cankers
If orchardists in pruning trees remove over-winter fire blight cankers, they can reduce this disease during the 1946 season, say extension plant pathologists of the Pennsylvania State College.

Handle Lanterns Carefully
Hang lanterns on secure hooks and away from inflammable material, such as cobwebs, hay and straw, while working in the barn, caution agricultural engineers of Pennsylvania State College.

Sheep Need Care
Ample fresh water, salt, plenty of exercise, and rations with good legume hay, are key essentials in good breeder ewe management, reminds W. B. Cornell, Penn State extension livestock specialist.

Cut Next Winter's Wood
Dry fuelwood gives twice the heat obtainable from green materials, according to extension forest experts at Penn State. They suggest that trees be cut now for next winter's fuel, bucking them to length, and ranking or stacking the pieces to dry out.

FOLLOW THE PATTERN

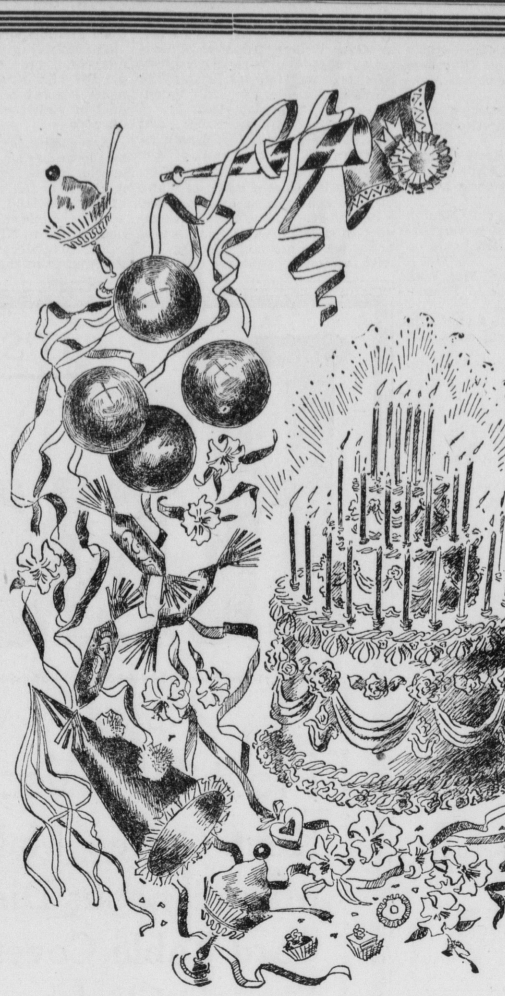

There is just one pattern to soften the uneasy process in our midst and that is to adopt that great principle, "The Brotherhood of Man." Without that pattern no segment of society can hope to be permanently successful.

REFORESTATION

It takes about 1,000 seedlings to an acre to plant a forest according to the State Department of Forests and Waters.

The Annual Banquet for football players and band of Spangler High School was held at the Brandon on Wednesday, Feb. 13. Over 200 persons were in attendance. The guest speaker was Pro Football Referee E. E. Miller, principal of Edison Junior High School, Harrisburg.
