Miners No Longer Need Look 'Black' On Pit Emergence

Coal miners no longer need to look like blackface comedians when they come out of the pits.

Increased use of synthetic soaps to lay mine dust is the reason.

These "soapless soaps", which chemists call wetting agents, are combined with a water spray. By reducing the amount of inflammable coal dust in the air they prevent explosions, reduce the health hazard and aid illumination.

The recent miners safety strike has brought about more extensive use of the synthetic dust keeperdowners.

Tests have shown that a synthetic, such as Nacconal made by Allied Chemical and Dye Corpused with the spray, cuts the dust to 10 million particles per cubic foot. The cost is less than one-fifth of a cent per ton of coal mined.

Besides lessening the danger of explosions, preventing silicosis and aiding illumination, the new system reduces the frequency need of rock-dusting.

Control Dog Ticks
Carriers of the serious Rocky Mountain spotted fever, dog ticks can be controlled by DDT. Extension entomologists of the Pennsylvania State College recommend a light dusting of 5 to 10 per cent DDT powder applied to grass, weeds, or shrubs at the rate of 2 to 4 pounds an acre, or one once per 1000 square feet.

Preserve Fence Posts
Only black locust and red cedar posts last well without some form of preservative. Extension foresters of the Pennsylvania State College recommend treatment for all other species if the fence line is to stand more than ten years.

Partnerships Work
A study conducted by the agricultural economics department of the Pennsylvania State College has revealed many successful father-and-son farm partnerships. Some conclusions drawn from the study have been published in Pennsylvania Farm Economics.

Provide Summer Shelters
Summer shelters on the poultry range provide healthful quarters for developing pullets and simplify the management problem by reducing labor requirements, according to F. H. The recent miners safety strike has brought about more extensive use of the synthetic dust keeperdowners.

The dustiest jobs in coal mining occur in cutting coal seams with mechanical saws and loading coal with automatic machines.

Dry cutting brings the dust up around 300 million or 400 million particles per cubic foot of air, which is highly dangerous. Dust can be reduced by using a spray of water with the cutting machines, but only a small percentage of the mines do this because water often is scarce and expensive in the mines.
