EDITORIAL VIEWS AND COMMENT

For instance, Harold Stass-en's name was the most mis-spelled, and MacArthur had so many ways of being spelled that it would tax most imag-inations. Even Dewey could be spelled "Duy", and so on. Then, there could be "Gen. Mac Ar-thur," "Doug," "Mr." and other titles appended. Each had to be tallied seenartally. From the adtallied separately. From the adtallied separately. From the advantage it gained for the can-didate, it meant nothing—but computation boards have to tal-ly the vote, and the names—as they come on the ballots.

From what one reads in the newspapers, all is far from harmonious in the ranks of the Republican party in Cambria County. It seems, from what we hear from outside, that there is a so-called "Gleason faction." Also there is an "Anti-Gleason." Around Results of last week's Primary Election indicate that the Anti-Gleasonites scored the victories, so far as the nominations were concerned, where there were contests. However, it is indicated that maybe the Gleasonites have been successful in electing the greater number of party committeemen and women and perhaps will be in the best position to elect their Republican County Chairman early in the summer. Presently, in order to patch up factional ism within the party, two co-hairmen have been serving. In all likilhood, that will come to an end.

sim within the party, two co-chairmen have been serving. In all liklihood, that will come to an end.

Without question, the Democrats in the coutny have by far the best organization, and that organization has been gaining in effectiveness, rather than diminishing in power. Somehow, the Democrats can fight among themselves, but still manage to salvage unity when it is most needed. The Republicans in Cambria County haven't been able to master this trait in recent years. Some of our Republican friends refer to what they call "Gleasonism" with more bitterness than they'd ever think possible of a Democrat.

Andrew J. Gleason, the titular head of the Gleason, the presentative of the Pennsylvania Manufacturer's Association, and the prestige of that organization in Republican State Politics is great—and has been influential for many years. As a result, patronage has allegedly been passed out in Cambria Co. through Gleason's office, and through his goodwill. Some of the Republican brethren do not like this idea. So, we have the Anti-Gleasonites.

With only about twenty-five per cent of the voters turning out at the primary election last week, one wonders whether or not the primary election last week, one wonders whether or not the primary election last week, one wonders whether or not the primary election idea is worth the cost entailed in conducting it. It costs the county just about as much to finance a light-election sit does one in which polling is exceptionally heavy. Advocates of the old convention system of nominating candidates are gaining

Last year, as some of our readers will remember, the N. E. A. had its Convention in Texas, followed by a trip over the state, following which the party flew to Mexico City, where a post-convention trip of another week was narrated at some length in these columns. We won't be gone as long this time, but there will be a large number of N. E. A. members who will spend another week in the West Indies, following the Carolina trip.

These National Editorial Association conventions have been helpful to us. Without question, the exchange of thoughts between country newspapermen from Maine to Oregon, and from the Gulf to the Great Lakes, has a tendency of giving all of us incentive to produce better newspapers. All in all, these people are a mighty fine lot, and it does everyone good to get away from the grind for a short time each vear.

With all the different plans that emanate from the Senate and House Committees on the proposed Draft and Military Service legislation at Washington, day by day, one wonders just what the final law will be. In an election year, the member of the House, at least, fears to do anthing that might cost him a vote.

However, if the problem of machinal votes as served as it is pictured to the public, certainly something must be done at once.
