

Buy Only Necessities, Buy Carefully, to Fight High Costs

Can You Get Along Without It? Then Do So

You can beat the high cost of living if you exercise care in buying and buy only what you absolutely need, says one housewife who tried it and brought the family account book out of the red. Writing in McCall's for May, Vivian Pike Boles tells how she saved herself a home permanent, saved on baby sitters fees, and also paid for a washing machine instead of a laundress.

"The day the high cost of living came out from between the covers of an economic textbook and sat on a brown paper bag which contained enough food to last with care, for three days, I hauled out the account books. It is a good thing I once took an elementary course in algebra; otherwise I couldn't have understood just how the answer could come out a minus. But minus it was. Obviously, some changes had to be made.

"When you can't adjust taxes, retirement, savings and insurance the only thing left is to cut expenses. In this class of spending the housewife has a chance to shine. A hard sounding rule, but one not so tough once you get at it in operation is: 'Don't buy anything you can get along without.'

"It was ingenuity that carried us through the war years when cooking; now ingenuity must be coupled with care. In buying, on the next shopping trip I checked the weights, measures and grades. If it were something which could be easily utilized, I bought the larger size wherever it meant a saving on the unit price. In the end I had saved 37 cents. That is not enough to rescue the budget, but multiplied by 100 trips to the grocer's in a year, and I have 37 dollars which equals a quarterly payment on an insurance policy.

"I asked our pediatrician if the baby could have margarine. That very wise old gentleman said 'Of course. Lots of babies do all the time!'

"I had been paying six dollars a week for a laundress. Her yearly wages more than paid for an automatic washing machine. Of course that left the matter of ironing up to me, but that, too, has been stripped to the essentials. No time or energy wasted on sheets and tea towels at our residence. I even noticed the shirts were fewer.

"I thought if Papa could make a shirt do two wearings, I could give up something, too. I haven't done it yet, but I have a shirt over a year. Shampoos and sets weren't taken to home permanent. I was taking a long and precarious step on the first home permanent.

"When the cost for a baby sitter adds a dollar or two to an evening's entertainment, you want to be sure it will be worth it. So we're continuing the policy we used during the war when sitters were impossible to find. My husband goes to the concert, I to the plays. We save our evenings for our friends.

"Our bill for books and magazines were slightly higher, but we accepted that as part of the compromise in staying home from more expensive kind of diversion. A good magazine lasts. It can be shared and it costs less so we really saved money there.

"You could go down on the list: wear a dress once more before it goes to the dry cleaner, leave the monogram off the stationery, play anagrams (if necessary) with the kids instead of going for a drive that doesn't always brighten up Sunday afternoon, don't drop in for a drink somewhere just because you have ten minutes to wait, let your friendliness show through you instead of through gifts.

"Except for one or two major adjustments, the easiest way to save money is to look for and to plug up all the little leaks. You have to think in terms of ten cents if you want to save any money at all."

Low Government Pay Drives Officials To Private Business

Industry Salaries Top That of Chief Executive

Private business hires managerial talent at $25,000 to $100,000 a year and finds that it pays. The federal government with a $40 billion annual budget, offers only its top job at $75,000. In its executive branch, its ten cabinet posts pay $15,000; less than 100 other jobs offer between $10,000 and $15,000. High administrative positions, whose incumbents are relied upon to keep government wheels turning, number about 1,700, with salaries ranging from $9,000 to $10,000 and virtually no chance of advancement. The result, says William Hard and Andre Visson, in 'The Reader's Digest for May,' is that many government officials are leaving for better paid jobs in private business.

Secretary of Agriculture Anderson reports losing one-sixth of all his top officials in two years. Since 1944, the Federal Trade Commission has similarly lost five members. Two of them have more than doubled their FCC salaries; another has more than tripled his. FCC members' salaries, fixed at $100,000 in 1914, have not advanced.

A former chairman of the Civil Aeronautics Board resigned his post because his $10,000 salary, "without independent wealth," could not meet Washington's high living costs. In resigning, he suggested to the President that "making wealth a prerequisite of the government service might not be consistent with democratic ideals."

Salaries of our foreign diplomats have been raised, but in some instances are so low that "keeping up a decent American front" means a personal financial loss. These salaries are generally below the levels paid by other nations to their diplomats. Our Ambassador to England has about $37,000 a year in salary and allowances; the British Ambassador in Washington has $80,000.

The authors cite the case of George V. Allen, new Assistant Secretary of State for Public Affairs. With America's biggest publicity job, he will be responsible next year for the expenditure of about $50,000,000 in recapturing the slanders against the United States and to spread the facts of our country all over the world. As Ambassador to Iran, Mr. Allen drew $17,000 a year, with allowances. In his new post he will get $13,500, with no allowances. Having no private income, he will make "great personal sacrifices" in reciprocating the courtesies of the many foreign embassies with whom he must deal.

Not only the high-ups in government are underpaid, the article observes. Those in low brackets, such as clerks and stenographers, receive salaries well below the private scale.

The government does not fully meet private salary levels, since government posts hold "certain psychological compensations." One is the sense of being on the "inside" of important events, another is the stimulation of having public power. For these compensations the type of man needed in government will endure some financial sacrifice, the authors say.

But true economy, they conclude, lies not in underpaying jobs but in eliminating surplus jobs.

Your Letters Can Be Sprightly, Says Gelett Burgess

Many a letter from your Aunt Clara and others, instead of being opened, is put aside with a sigh. "You know what it will be," says Gelett Burgess in the 'Reader's Digest for May.' "Dull and flat, the first page full of excuses for not having written sooner. According to Burgess, the Aunt Clara can travel around the world or witness the explosion of an atom bomb, and think of nothing better to say than 'Marvelous.'"

To sit down and write a sprightly letter in cold blood may be a hard thing to do, he concedes. But with a little probing of your thoughts and whims, your letters can be rich and rewarding. Instead of confining your writing to bald statements of events or trivialities of gossip, you should follow the lead of your individual ideas and reactions.

Take notes of day-to-day happenings and thoughts, and look over your notes when it's time to write. They will give your letter "the perfume of original enthusiasm."

Among the don'ts of letter writing, Burgess includes any unflattering prospect, try a short one. Short letters, if sent often enough, can keep a friendship alive and sparkling.

Co. Hot Lunches Involve Much Food

Several carloads of foodstuffs were distributed to schools in the county by the federal government during the current school term for use in "hot lunch" programs. Arrangements for distributing food to schools were made by Dr. Clara Shryock, assistant county school superintendent.

According to Eugene F. Kuhn, business manager of Cresson Sanatorium and distributing agent in the district for the U. S. Dept. of Agriculture, the following amounts of foodstuffs were distributed so far this year:

Sweet potatoes, 1,072 bushels; Irish potatoes, 1,720 100-pound bags; tomato juice, 9,528 46-ounce cans; grapefruit juice, 19,200 46-ounce cans; seedless raisins, 35,250 pounds; dried prunes, 50,930 pounds; peanut butter, 4,230 cans; tomatoes, 1,350 cans; apples, 660 bushels; cheddar cheese, 21,250 pounds; and dried California figs, 31,240 pounds.
