State Store Clerk Civil Service Exams Scheduled Soon

Harrisburg—An examination program to fill more than 100 State Store clerk positions was announced this week by the state Civil Service Commission.

Written examinations will be held by Allentown, DuBois, Erie, Harrisburg, Johnstown, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Wilkes-Barre and Williamsport on Sept. 17 for the jobs which pay from $1848 to $2124 a year. Deadline for applications is Aug. 23.

The Commission said the lists of eligibles established in February 1948. Persons who qualified in last year's program and who have not received an appointment must take this examination to be considered for appointment, the SCSC added.

A "considerable number" of applicants will receive offers from the Pennsylvania Liquor Control Board for temporary employment as extra personnel during the holiday season, the PLCB has advised the Commission.

Applicants must be citizens, 21 years of age and have been legal residents of the Commonwealth for at least one year prior to submission of an application. In addition to the standard SCSC application form, applicants must fill in a supplementary SCSC form which contains questions about the candidates' physical condition and any arrest record.

No positions exist in Forest and Union Counties, the SCSC explained. However, applicants from those areas may be appointed to posts in nearby counties.

Applications may be obtained at the following places: The State Civil Service Commission at Harrisburg; State and County offices of the Department of Public Assistance; local offices of the Pennsylvania State Employment Service; the State Office and State Stores of the Pennsylvania Liquor Control Board; State and District Offices of the Bureau of Employment and Unemployment Compensation; State, County and District Offices of the Department of Health.

Party for Child Requires Careful, Efficient Planning to Insure Success

Every mother wants her daughter to make friends and be popular. A party is a good way to help a child develop this ability, but it must be carefully planned to succeed. The child must be allowed to take on some of the responsibility of planning and preparing, and help in suggestions and guidance from her mother, says child expert Toni Taylor. Writing in McCall's, in collaboration with Luella M. Foster, Director of the Kansas University Nursery School, she tells mother what to do when her daughter gives a party.

"Once a mother has decided to let her daughter plan a party, she must be wise if the experiment is to be successful. The child will need help and guidance and the wholehearted approval of the whole family. To be good hostess she must feel secure and confident and it is at home and with her family that security begins.

"Then, given a chance she will probably show a surprising amount of imagination and skill in her preparations. After all, she is the best judge of what interests her friends, and she will welcome suggestions from her mother if they enhance her own ideas.

"The kind of party, who will be invited and where it will take place, the games and the menu—these are the things that must be decided well in advance.

"Don't let her take on so much that she becomes discouraged before the party even begins. But once she has decided what she wants, do let her take the responsibility for carrying through. Let her invite her friends and choose the things that are to be played so that game equipment if needed, and prizes, can be ready.

"Decide what part of the residence is to be used and what rooms left for the family, and have some outdoor games if possible. Where there are other children in the family, they should be allowed to invite playmates for the afternoon of the party and enjoy the same menu. This is a more effective way of keeping them from being a nuisance than by telling them to keep out of the way.

"At the party itself, friends greeted your daughter's having, you do go about some activity of your own. And when the party is over let her know you think she has done a good job."

2 Blood Derivatives Received By Red Cross, Johnstown

Two blood derivatives, one useful for aid in shock and the other a help in some measles cases, have been received by the Johnstown Regional Blood Center, Red Cross officials announced on Tuesday of this week. The blood fractions, serum albumin, and immune serum globulin, like whole blood, will be free to patients needing them, it was learned.

Dr. Repligle Mayer and Dr. Joseph A. Spiegler stated that they endorsed the work of the national blood program of the American Red Cross in keeping pace with the progress made by medical scientists about blood and its uses.

Referring to the 96 vials of serum albumin received at the center, Dr. Repligle said that the derivative had proved a successful medical aid in the treatment of shock.

"It has also been put to work in the treatment of some kidney and liver diseases," he said.

"Immune serum globulin is used chiefly for lessening the severity of, and in some cases, preventing measles," Dr. Mayer, pediatrician explained. The center has 2,000 vials for use.

"It is frequently given to children who have been exposed to measles. A mild case of measles which creates a permanent immunity is the result if the dosages and time interval are properly adjusted," he stated.

"When it is important to prevent a child from having measles, the serum can do so in about 10 days time. The blood derivative does not offer permanent immunity to measles but merely a passive one," he warned.

Dr. Mayer said that the serum was extremely used during the measles epidemic last year. At that time it was secured from a commercial laboratory.

Concerning scientific advancement of knowledge about blood, Dr. Repligle cited discoveries of the last 25 years.

"More facts about blood have been learned in the past quarter of a century than in all the years of past history," he said.

"The recently-gained knowledge has already revolutionized the treatment of some diseases," the surgeon said. "But much remains to be learned. There is hope that when additional uses for blood and its derivatives are discovered, doctors will have more weapons for fighting disease and safeguarding life."

Farm Show Space Hike Feeling Varied

Harrisburg—Feeling continues to run high here in many quarters over the decision of the State Farm Show Commission last week to boost space rates for commercial booths at the 1950 Farm Show.

Observers in general point out however, that continued skyrocketing maintenance and operational costs more than justified the increase, which has not resulted in a decision by more than a score of farm equipment dealers to withdraw their planned exhibits.

However, this action on the part of the group is not expected by commission officials to interfere in any way with commercial space plans. Nearly 150 prospecfractions are just what their name implies, components or parts of blood. They are obtained from blood by physical and chemical methods of separation. The blood extracts will be available to patients in hospitals in this area.
