New Hunting Licenses Available At Courthouse

Cambria County hunters may get their 1949 hunting licenses now. Ernest Apel, county treasurer, says the new licenses have arrived at the courthouse.

The 1949 licenses expire Aug. 31 and hunters will need the new one to hunt groundhogs, the treasurer said. He pointed out, too, that licenses will cost more this year.

A resident hunting license will cost $3.15 instead of $2 as formerly. Non-resident hunters will pay $20 instead of $15.

—Great success is a doubtful prize—either you work too much or too many to get it.

Hughes No. 11 Mine, Blandburg, Visited By U. S. Inspector

Further ventilation safeguards and other precautions are proposed for the Forks Coal Mining Co.'s Hughes No. 11 mine near Blandburg, Pa., following a report issued Monday by the Bureau of Mines. Current safety measures also are cited. Some 37 men were employed at the 150-ton-a-day pit when it was visited last month by Inspector L. A. Ferry.

Recommending more air for the working sections, Inspector Ferry also suggested provision of another permissible flame-safety lamp and preshift exams for employees with the adopted respirator and an automatic stop-signal for the ventilating fan.

The inspector also proposed several changes and electrical safeguards. Those included clearing obstructions from the haulage roads, use of enclosed trip lights and secure blocking of standing cars, guarding of the trolley wires at dangerous points and overload protection for certain electrical equipment.

Adequate first-aid supplies were maintained underground, reported Ferry, who also cited such established safety features as conformance with the adopted timbering standards, use of permissible explosives and approved shutoff units for all blasting, suitable fire fighting facilities underground, frame-grounding of all electrical equipment and proper maintenance of the escapeways.

Among other recommendations were safe location of individual containers of explosives and detonators, 100 percent wearing of safety apparel, and discontinuance of using open-flame lights and smoking in the mine.

Schools to Remind 18-Year-Old Boys Draft Law In Force

Pennsylvania selective service headquarters has asked the public schools to make sure schoolboys sign up for the draft on their 18th birthdays.

The peace-time draft law requires boys to register when they reach 18 even though the Army has stopped drafting men. The armed services are relying on voluntary enlistments.

Lt. Col. Henry M. Gross, state draft director, says a "remarkably few" boys fail to sign up. A spot check of 500 boys in one community showed that less than 10 percent neglected to register.

Gross says he has asked Dr. Francis B. Haas, state public instruction superintendent, to write all local schools urging them to remind teen-agers they must report to their draft boards on their 18th birthdays.

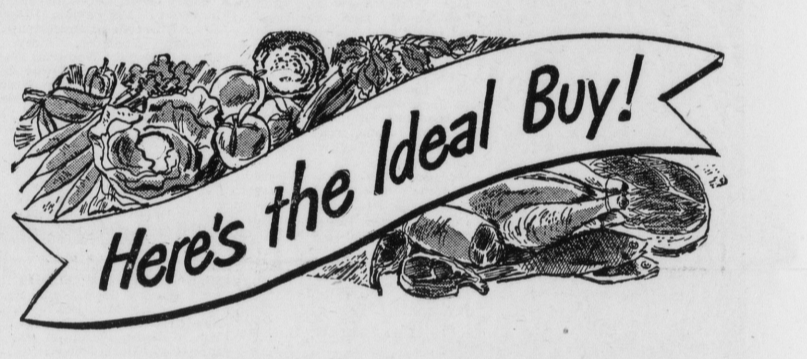

About 6,000 Pennsylvania boys become 18 every month. Of the 695,000 men who have registered for post-war draft, 63,000 are under 18.

Gross said most draft law violators are picked up as the result of arrests or when applying for jobs.

The 175 local draft boards have been operating on a standby basis since last year.
