Fox Hunting Record Claimed By Keller

"Champion fox hunter of Pennsylvania" is the title Columbia County, farmer might well claim. Over the past four years, during which records were kept, Mr. Keller together with several of his hunting pals has slain 351 foxes over Keller's three fine bounds. All of these foxes were taken between Aug. 20 and Mar. 31, the lawful dog training season. Thus his actual legal hunting time was reduced to about 30 months for the four-year period.

During the small and big game hunting season he does very little fox hunting, if any, because of the many hunters afield. On Mar. 31, Mr. Keller announced that he and his hunting companions had killed 110 foxes, the highest score of any year in the four-year period. Of these 110 foxes, 109 were grays and only one was a red. They were all taken in the counties of Columbia, Montour and Northumberland, most of them in Columbia.

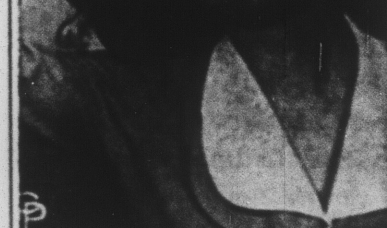

He reports that since late in the war period he has noticed a decided decrease in the red fox population and an equally definite increase in gray foxes. For his own information, he examined eight females taken late last winter. The vixens were found to be carrying 50 young.
