PERNICIOUS ANEMIA
Before the discovery in 1926 of a treatment for pernicious anemia, that disease was a greater threat to human life than cancer is at the present time.

No one knows the exact cause of pernicious anemia but we do know it appears whenever bone marrow, instead of manufacturing normal mature red cells, produces immature and deformed corpuscles which are not capable of carrying sufficient oxygen to supply the body's needs.

One who is attacked by this blood disease may never suspect what his illness is or even that he is seriously ill at all in the early stages.

When this was first discovered, patients were fed liver, sometimes raw, often partly cooked, in large quantities.

In addition to liver extract, patients are given small amounts of dilute hydrochloric acid with meals because of losses of certain substances in the gastric juice, which is the secretion that helps

Placement Tests Aid Air Force Job Of Assignments

A new method for determining the type of work for which a young man or woman is best adapted and has the best chance for success, recently was introduced by the U. S. Air Force.

"By helping each recruit find his best career field through the use of placement tests," Sgt. Fox stated, "we believe we have taken one of the most forward steps of any large organization—whether it be industry or within the armed forces."

The research, he added, has produced at least two conclusions: (1) The assignment of jobs based solely upon results of general intelligence tests does not assure the placement of young men and women in career fields for which they are best suited.

This superiority in a special field is not revealed by general intelligence tests, Sgt. Fox said. All Air Force recruits now are given aptitude tests, followed by a personal interview with a skilled vocational guidance counselor.

The counselor learns the career preferences of the young airman and discusses with him his career potentialities as indicated by the placement tests.

On the basis of the recruit's scores in the tests and his personal interests, he is assigned to an Air Force Specialty. After completing his basic training, the airman is assigned to an Air Force Base for apprentice training or to an Air Force Technical School for training in his chosen career.

Then follows steady advancement for the airman through a combination of experience at Air Force installations and additional study at advanced technical schools.

Air Force psychologists believe the new Vocational Guidance program is of greater benefit to young persons planning a career. Information for a choice profession with the U. S. Air Force is available at the U. S. Army and U. S. Air Force Recruiting Station, Luxenberg Building, 1003 Philadelphia Ave., Barnesboro.

Soil Conservation Unit in County Open for Business

Service Applications Available from Board
The newly-formed soil conservation unit in Cambria County is now functioning. Applications for service now are available to the farmers in this county.

Plans for operation of the new district were announced following a board of directors meeting in the Ebensburg Courthouse Thursday evening of last week. The meeting was attended by representatives of federal and state agencies and by representatives of a number of Cambria County farmers' organizations.

Dean McKeever, representative of the Federal Conservation Service, assured the county organization that a federal technician will be assigned to the county sometime this fall. In the meantime the technical services to farmers will be under the supervision of William S. Wetzel of Indiana, who is serving as technician in that county.
