Plenty of Turkey Still to Be On Hand

Harrisburg—(PNS)—Plenty of turkeys, fresh from Pennsylvania farms, will be available for dinner on Thanksgiving from the biggest crop ever known in the state, according to the Pennsylvania Dept. of Agriculture.
And there should be an abundance for Christmas, too, the department added. It was found that growers plan to market a greater percentage of their birds during November and December than ever before.

Not only is the total of 1,474,000 turkeys raised in Pennsylvania this year a new record high but the national output of 44,550,000 is the greatest in history. Pennsylvania produces more than any other northeastern state.
Accompanying the record number of Pennsylvania grown turkeys will be plenty of cranberries and all other "trimmings" for the Thanksgiving dinner, except that pumpkins for the traditional "topping off" pie are not so plentiful as in recent years.
Pennsylvania turkey growers have seen to it that housewives may obtain more of the popular small size turkeys this year than previously. Many growers started their poulters earlier, grew them to weights of eight to 10 or 12 pounds, dressed them for the oven, and then froze or stored the birds for holiday marketing.
