

Wage Uniformity Topic At Meeting Of Policemen's Unit

Need of uniformity of wages and other police programs within the area of Rhoadsdend Lodge 33, Fraternal Order of Police, were discussed at a meeting last Sunday in Homer City.

It was pointed out that the top monthly salary pay scale in the six largest communities of the lodge area, which includes Northern Cambria, Indiana, Jefferson and Armstrong Counties, varies from $245 in Kittanning to $195 in Blairsville.

Other communities in the lodge area and their top monthly wages are Indiana, $230; Barnesboro, $225; Homer City, $210, and Puncstutney, $205.

Top wage scale in the lodge area is $33 below the average of the Kiski Valley Lodge area, the western part of Armstrong County and several surrounding counties. Average wages in the Kiski Valley area are $278, which is $4 lower than the average laborer's wages in private industry, lodge officers claim.

Two associate members were accepted into the lodge and approved given a regular membership. Next meeting will be held on Aug. 19 in Puncstutney.

Joseph Kerrigan, young dramatic tenor from Brooklyn, N. Y., who graduated from St. Francis College, Loretto, this spring, gave a recital at his alma mater last Saturday evening. The program was held at Doyle Hall on the college campus.

Kerrigan bid for fame in the entertainment world in Johnstown at the State Theater, when he captured first place in the "Star Discovery" contest. From that contest he went on to capture the district honors at the Manos Theater in Greensburg.

A few weeks ago, in the finals at the Stanley Theater in Pittsburgh, Kerrigan was the tri-state winner.

Helen K. Carroll, vocal instructor at the college, accompanied the young tenor in his recital. Since recognizing his talent, she has been his only singing teacher. He holds a bachelor of arts degree at St. Francis.

Kerrigan came to Loretto last Saturday from Pittsburgh, where he has completed an appearance at the Monte Carlo Restaurant. He will now go to New York City for an engagement on the Arthur Godfrey show. Engagements in Cleveland and Buffalo are scheduled to follow.

Seek Depletion Cut In Income Levies For Coal Industry

Spokesmen for the coal industry want tax-writing senators to go along with the House in voting a special "depletion allowance" for coal.

Under it, coal operators would be permitted to deduct 10 percent of their gross income each year before figuring their income tax, so long as the deduction did not exceed 50 percent of net income. The theory is based on the thought that mining of coal or other minerals uses up part of the wealth which produces the income and cannot be replaced.

The oil industry has a 27 1/2 percent depletion allowance. Arguing for the coal industry were James W. Haley of the National Coal Association and John D. Jillson of Wilkes-Barre the secretary of the Anthracite Institute.

Jillson told the Senate Finance Committee last week the depletion allowance for one ton of anthracite figures out at 50 cents whereas the allowance on a quantity of crude oil equivalent to one ton of the coal is $3.25, "a difference of $2.75 or 550 percent in favor of oil."

Haley said coal is the nation's most important resource but it has been victimized by a gross and aggravated inequity "in favor of coal's competitors."

He told the committee that to permit a depletion allowance for coal, such as the House has voted in its new tax bill, would help

Few GIs Seeking Primary Ballots

Few servicemen are taking advantage of a special 1951 law giving them the right to cast an absentee ballot in the July 24 primary election.

The State Elections Bureau reported that only 219 applications in the form of post cards had been received by the end of last week. Applications for absentee ballots by relatives or friends in behalf of the men in the service would swell the 219 total.

Unofficial estimates place the number of Keystone State servicemen at 200,000 at the present time.

VACATIONAL HAZARDS
Walk, don't run, into your vacation. Even though you have been looking forward to it for 11 months, take it easy.

Vacations are an annual hazard. We leap into them as if all life, death and the great hereafter had to be crowded into a week or two with pay. In preparation we madly buy, tune up the car, and route our 2,000-mile itinerary. When we get going, we take in enough historic interest and swim enough lengths to lay us end to end. Pushed by our sense of limitation in time, money and energy, we spend our holidays so frantically that we lose sight of what a vacation is—a period in which to vacate ourselves from our usual stresses and labors so that we may return to them refreshed.

Our most serious ever-expending is in energy. We do too much of everything. We open ourselves to over-fatigue, accidents, infection, indigestion. We do not allow ourselves time to let down.

The best thing to take along on a holiday is discretion. If you are in the forties, don't play tennis as if you were still on the freshman team. At any age, don't hike 25 miles the day after you have driven 400. Don't, on the first day out, spend eight hours in bathing trunks on the sunny lake, alternately rowing and swimming. Don't forget that there are foods other than hamburgers and coffee.

We might do well to emulate the practice followed by summer camps. Every child must have had a recent physical examination. Both parents and physicians must list his physical weaknesses and illness histories. Armed with this information, camp directors are able to meet emergencies and employ preventive measures.

We also would do well to have a physical check-up before we start on a trip. Know that our hearts are equal to the demands we plan to put upon them. Know what is best for sunburn and for poison ivy, know if we have allergies. Find out if there are health measures we should take during our time away from work that will send us back to it with renewed vitality.

There is another camping procedure that we all might do well to follow. In caps, any injury or illness is given immediate attention. If ordinary first-aid procedure and a woolsack indicate a stomach-ache may mean a bad appendix, and a swollen ankle indicate a severe circulatory disturbance.

Perhaps in the matter of strain and stress we should show our best in caution. If we have strained a wrist in a smashing back-hand, we would be wise to have a check-up by a physician who has been grounded in the knowledge of the part normal body structure plays in normal body operation. What may be a slight stricture in function today, may become a serious derangement tomorrow. It's the old game of prevention philosophy applied to our bodies as mechanical entities.

When vacation times come, use your head. Walk, don't run.
