Seven Thousand Wild Ducklings Now Released By Game Commission

A new Pennsylvania duck program has given waterfowl its rightful place in the state's wild-life management scheme, the State Game Commission announces. While the waterfowl problem is largely a federal and international one, and the Commonwealth is not the duck state some others are for lack of flat, marsh areas, still it is believed there are things that can be done to better the situation for our duck hunters and the wildfowl program. Hunters who cooperate will be told where and when each bird in question was liberated.

The expectation is that here as gram generally.

Early this summer, approximately 7,000 four to seven week-old ducklings—mailards and black duck and mailard crossbreeds—were released over the state, wherever there were suitable areas. There young waterfowl were liberated on beaver ponds, hidden marshes and other inaccessible spots far from himans who
