Col. Jim Duffy Had Elk Park On Cumberland Co. Estate

One Bull Had Horns Each Six Feet Long

Harrisburg—Henry W. Shoemaker, President of the Pennsylvania Folklore Society, State Museum, Harrisburg, says "The antlers of some of the largest native elks ever killed in Pennsylvania are said to hang on the walls of the former Cameron Mansion at King's Gap" near Mount Holly Springs, Cumberland County.

"Prior to the Civil War, Colonel James Duffy of Anderson's Ferry, now Marietta, Lancaster Co., established a deer park at his home overlooking the Susquehanna, where, with his friends, he retired to enjoy much of the same shooting as still could be found in the forests of Northern Pennsylvania," Shoemaker said.

"To stock this preserve, he employed rangers who came to Marietta, spring and fall, to sell their timber, most of them wading on the return trip to their mountain homes.

"In early life, Col. Duffy had hunted in the Old Black Forest in Clinton, Potter and Tioga counties and had shot some mammoth elks. It was easy to stock his game park with the native deer; they were still to be found at the headwaters of Conestoga Creek in Lancaster County and in the Blue Mountains of Lebanon and Danphin Counties.

"The elk were driven back to a limited area in the north, the Elk-Spring on the Jersey Shore and Coudersport turnpike, Hammerleys Park on Kettle Creek, on Bennett's Branch of Sinnemahoning. The elk would come from the Black Forest, principally by their path down Soldier's Run in single file; herds of a dozen or more cows and calves led by a massively antlered bull.

"The very last herd to turn up in Tioga County appeared about 1871 or 1872, 18 in number and were rounded up four or five miles north of Wellsboro on the road to Adamey Corners, near a big spring, shaded by immense white pines, where they were all but a few, slaughtered and their heads captured.

"One elk was kept alive for a year in a barnyard with a high fence.
