Mrs. Rosetta Donahue and Mrs. Don McNelis attended the 50th wedding anniversary reception of were delivered to the present owner's great-grandfather and grandma. The cabinetmaker of the past age built we'll, and took pride in his work, and he fashioned every conceivable kind of household furniture. The oldfashioned bureau, the ancestor of the modern dresser, particularly was his pride of achievement. Quite naturally, the cabinetmaker was the only man in the ker was the only man in the early settlements that was qualified to make a cuffin, and because of this most everyone of them also embarked in the undertaking business. The result was that even when factory-made furniture and regular furniture stores became part of the business environment of the country—Furniture and Undertaking were always linked together Even after modern embalming methods after modern embalming methods came into play, and the business became a profession, the average mortician presumed too, that he must continue to be a furniture dealer.

Cubinetmakine wasn't a trade that was hastily acquired. The old-time tradesman really was an artist in his line. Some of his products today are bringing really big prices in the antique markets, and mostly the pieces are strong and mostly the pieces are strong and substantial to this day

Perhaps most of the furniture that still remains in Carrolltown from the cabinetmaker production was made by either the firm of C. A. and S. H. Buck, or from Joseph Belie and Son. Henry. Particularly did the Behe firm continue in existence for many years, up to and after 1900, by Henry Behe. Adam Stoiz, grandfather of Postmisster O. P.
