

Davy Crockett Proud Owner Of Old Pennsylvania Rifle

Killed 100 Pigeons In Row With 'Old Betsy'

Henry W. Shoemaker, Pennsylvania folklore chief, this week told the tale of one of Davy Crockett's visits to Pennsylvania. Elected to Congress in 1834, the new lawmaker made a string of visits which included Baltimore, Boston, New York and Philadelphia.

"In the Quaker City, he was first greeted by a reception committee formed by the Crockett of Crockett Society, composed of Irish-born and Irish-descended Crocketts who threw a magnificent party in their namesake's honor," Shoemaker said.

"Their chief gift was a bronze image of the Crockett coat-of-arms from Donegal surrounded by a wreath. The frontiersman did not understand heraldry but remarks that bird is like a Trumpeter Swan."

"Yet the Pennsylvania Dutch or Switzers were not to be outdone with a tribute and petitioned Jacob Mylin of Lancaster County, and grandson of Martin Mylin, the first maker of the so-called Kentucky rifle, to part with his choicest piece as a tribute to Crockett."

"The Alpine gunsmith was just finishing his masterpiece, a replica of his grandfather's greatest rifle, the truest shooter, his first piece by the way, at his little stone gun shop south of Lancaster city and recently marked by the Pennsylvania Historical and Museum Commission. He hurried by the 'bus' to Philadelphia to turn over his prize package to the great wilderness king's Dutch admirers."

"It was presented to Crockett at a stately reception held in the Franklin Institute's club house by one of the younger Peppers, a member of that great family of Pennsylvania-German philanthropists and civic leaders."

"Crockett grinned broadly as the handsome 72-inch rifle was handed to him.

"This is the piece I have al-

Oppose Props On Wheat

Area voting was very light last Saturday in the nationwide wheat referendum.

Farmers in district counties voted against the federal wheat program for the 1965 growing season.

The vote was 14-1 against the acreage and marketing controls in Cambria County, where 89 farmers were eligible to vote.

Nationwide, the voting was 77 percent in favor of supports,
