The True Picture

Did it ever occur to you that the local merchant is something more than a man who takes your money for a sale and wraps the purchase?

Like you, the merchant is an average individual. He supports community welfare, the fraternal and charitable programs, just as you do. He belongs to a church, his children go to the local school, he and his wife attend PTA meetings.

You may not belong to the same church, or the same organizations, but more than often your paths cross in community affairs, for here is where you have the most in common—a genuine interest in community welfare. You both gain if the community prospers; both stand to lose if the area fails to prosper.

Each has a role to play in community prosperity. The merchant offers goods and services; you, the local citizen, purchase these goods and services with dollars that speak for a good local economy.

Get to know your local merchants better. Visit them more often. They'll appreciate it and you'll discover that it's a lot more fun to do business with your friends.

Trade in district stores for your own sake—and for community progress.
