must have some grounds for maintaining it.

It will be remembered that Frank Woodruff gave the police a circumstantial account of where the trunk was to be found shortly after his arrest on the west side. Detective Andy Rohan was detailed not long since to pump Woodruff. Woodruff told him that it was about 3 o'clock in the morning when he and McDougal and McIvilie dumped the trunk at that place. The officers already had found another man who saw the trunk early that Sunday morning. This gentleman and his wife drove north on Evanston avenue at 7 o'clock past the place where the trunk was found and saw no trunk. Returning to roadside the trunk was found and saw no trunk.

Woodruff's story was that he threw the runk from the wagon beside the road. The bartender, who reported the truck to the police, found it some distance rom the road, under a fence.

"Woodruff," said Palmer, "that truck was not beside the road at 7 o'clock and t was at 8. We have a man who drove by there."

"Come now," said he, "tell me how you found that out."

"That man kept his horse at Dean's stable, and I heard him tell about the trunk where he first saw it when he came back to the stable."

State's Attorney Longenecker says he will have simonds here before Burke gets back from Winnipeg, but there are doubts about this.

WINNIPEO, Man., July 23.—Burke's lawyers have moved for a writ of habeas corpus on behalf of the famous Cronin suspect. Argument is fixed before the full court. The lawyers have been hanging off, doubtless expecting some one to put up money to carry on an appeal, but none has been forthcoming.

Knack disappeared from home as soon as his wife was buried. His first wife died last April rather suddenly, and it is now thought that he poisoned her also. Knack instructed his two small sons to tell anyone who asked them how their stepmother died, that they saw her swallow some pills about an hour before her death. The boys did not see her swallow anything, and told what their father said to a neighbor, who immediately swore out a warrant.

CHICAGO, July 22.—The squealers are tumbling over each other in their efforts to get to the chief of police and state's attorney to tell what they know of Camp No. 20, Clan-na-Gael, and the causes which led to the murder of Dr. Cronin. Chief of Police Hubbard says that the policy of the state was to delay. Since the adjournment of the special grand jury all connected with the prosecution of the case have been quietly at work accumulating new evidence, and their efforts thus far have been so successful that they are in no hurry to stop the process.

that they are in no hurry to stop the process.

Hardly a day passes that some link in the chain of evidence against the men already indicated is not considerably strengthened or a new one welded, and fresh light as to the extent and ramifications of the conspiracy is constantly dawning upon them.

The stream of aquenders from the membership of Camp 20 has been steadily thowing into the state's attorney's office, and its volume is gradually increasing until it promises to end in a purfect flood. Judge Longenecker is inclined to think that if he waits a very little while longer the members who have not already volunteered their testimony will be breaking their necks in their stories.

have not already volunteered their testimony will be breaking their nocks in their efforts to be the first to reach him with their stories.

The July grand jury is about to be empanelled, but as there are 160 other cases waiting their attention, it is now considered not among the probabilities that the Cronin case will be considered by them. Judge Longenecker says it will not be brought up unless he secures more evidence than he has now, but he does not say he will not call a special grand jury immediately after the regular body deposes of the jail cases, and there are grounds for believing that he will do so.

The information concerning the frequent visits of Coughlin and Burke to Alexander Sullivan's office shortly before May 4 last is receiving the careful attention of the authorities, who attach more importance to it than they care to admit. "I don't know what importance may attach to it," said Chief Hubbard, this afternoon. "We are looking into it, however, and of course if we can establish what the nature of the conversation at those interviews was, or the objects of the visits, it may prove to be very important."

"Are you providing witnesses to go before the grand jury that meets Monday in connection with this case?"

"Well, I hardly know what to wnswer to that. I don't think so. It is more likely that the case will not come before the present grand jury. Our polely for the present is that of delay."

"Do you really believe that other indictments than those already returned, and against other parties, will be found in connection with this case?"

The chief paused iong before answering, and then said very deliberately:
"Tes, 1 do."

Origin of the Curfew.

The curfew is said to have been introduced into England by William the Conqueror. By that monarch it was ordained under severe penalties, when the curfew bell rang at eight o'clock in the evening all lights and fires should be extinguished. There are those who hold that this was merely the enforcing of an existing and very common police regulation to that effect. The absolute prohibition of lights after the ringing of the curfew bell was abolished by Henry I., in the year 1100, but the practice of tolling a bell at a fixel hour in the evening was continued, and this, which is still extant in some places, is a survival of the curfew of medieval times. At first the common hour was seven o'clock, then it was gradually advanced to eight, and in some places to nine o'clock; indeed, in Scotland, ten o'clock was not an unusual hour. The curfew was a regulation most useful in those early days, when it was the custom to place the fire in a hole in the middle of the floor, under an opening in the root, to allow the escape of the smoke. When the family retired for the night, the fire was extinguished by covering it up; hence the term converteau or curfew. The regulation was also serviceable in obliging the women to keep in their houses, and thus preventing night brawls in the street. It is believed there is no historical authority for the popular tradition that the severity exhibited by the Conqueror, in enforcing obedience to the curfew, was most particularly designed to prevent the English from assembling in secret to plan schemes of rebellion against their Norman lords.—[New York Dispatch.

Dr. Kellmeyer, of Vienna has proved by experiments that a man's head of hair, if left alone, will on an average grow one-third faster and one-fifth longer than a woman's. Our ancestors, he holds, must have roamed the woods in a coiffure resembling the tail of a first class comet; but purposes of ornament had nothing to do with nature's remarkable lavishness in that respect. Her real intent was rather prompted by considerations of safety—specially longhaired individuals being mest apt to inspire their enemies with the requisite amount of terror. A brawny biped, sporting a beard a la Justin McCarthy, and a shock of hair from six to seven feet long, must, indeed, have had a fair chance to range his native woods unmolested.—[Cincinnati Enquirer.]
