Mrs. Susannah Watkins, widow of Chief of Police Watkins of Parsons, was awarded $2500 damages yesterday afternoon against John Schumacher, a saloon keeper who sold liquor to her husband last September while he was intoxicated and in which condition he was killed on the railroad.

John Oschman of South Heberton brought suit against Morris Ulrich last week for the sum of ten cents. Both men were employed at No. 1 Highland, and Ulrich, requiring a little extra help some time ago, engaged Oschman to work one shift for him. Upon receiving his pay Oschman claimed that he was entitled to ten cents more. This demand was denied by Ulrich, and the result was a lawsuit. The hearing took place before Squire Johnson on Friday evening, and, after taking the testimony of several witnesses, the Justice rendered a decision in favor of Mr. Ulrich. Oschman, therefore, was minus the dime he expected to make, but was given the privilege of paying the costs of the suit. The company obtained knowledge of the affair and Oschman was immediately discharged from their employ.

Rev. Thos. Brehony of Eckley is making extensive arrangements to hold a grand fair during the holidays. The fair will open on Christmas Eve in the basement of the Church of Immaculate Conception and continue open every evening until all the articles are disposed of. The parish being very small Father Brehony states that any articles contributed by persons of neighboring parishes will be thankfully received. All such will be placed on exhibition with the donor's name and residence attached. The church is sadly in need of rebuilding and all profits of the fair will be applied to that purpose. Persons wishing to donate any article can send it to the pastor, Father Brehony, between now and the time of opening the fair.

Killed by a Fall of Coal.

Thomas McBride, a miner at No. 2 colliery, Beaver Meadow, met with a horrible death Saturday afternoon. McBride was alone at work driving a perpendicular chamber. The miners in the adjoining breast for a long time failed to hear McBride working and going into his chamber discovered him almost completely covered by a fall of coal. When discovered in his perilous position McBride was still alive, and urged his fellow workers to release him. They went to work at once, but before they accomplished the task life had gone out. Deceased was aged 31 years and 5 months and leaves a wife and three children.

Trying to Keep It Dark.

The editor of the Progress evidently does not relish any allusion to his "still hunt" for the postmastership of Free-land. We commented last week upon one of his articles in relation to hold-over postmasters and his retort was a puny supplication to be let alone. It doesn't make a particle of difference to us whether he is in the race or not, but, inasmuch as he is, the Trinuxk has an unquestionable right to criticise his or any other applicant's presumptuous claim to the office. This we will do, when necessary, and without resorting to the use of any narrow-guaged personal slurs.

John Slago, a Hungarian, was shot and dangerously wounded by a companion while gunning in the woods at Audenried on Tuesday. He was looking into the barrel of his companion's gun to see if it was blocked up with mud when it exploded and almost blew off his entire face. Slago had just been granted a marriage license the day previous and had gone out with his intended brother-in-law to kill something for the wedding feast.

The general store of Pardee Sons & Co. at Mt. Pleasant was destroyed by fire on Sunday night. The building was a large two-story structure, 75x40. Nearly all the contents of the store were consumed. The fire originated in the second story by the bursting of a stove. The loss is estimated at $8,000 on stock and $3,500 on building. Both building and stock were insured.

JOHN CHINAMAN'S WOOING.

As a pretty young typewriter sat at her desk near an office window looking out on Broad street the other day, working rapidly with her nimble fingers, she felt the consciousness of strange eyes upon her, and raised her own only to meet those of a Chinaman. The Chinaman was gazing at her intently.

The Chinaman was gazing at her intently.

The young lady went on with her work, thinking the strange little figure would depart; but it moved not, neither did it speak for some minutes. After gazing at her intently, the figure glided noiselessly into the office, and said to one of the clerks: "Melican gal muches likee Chinee."

The "Melican girl" referred to flushed with embarrassment and indignation. She didn't fancy being likened to those ladies with small feet and queer faces that disport themselves upon fans and banners. The clerk started to say that he could see no re semblance, but the Celestial had departed as noiselessly as he had come in.

The next day and the next the value.

semblance, but the Celestial had departed as noiselessly as he had come in.

The next day and the next the yellow man in blue clothes stood silently at the window and gazed at the pretty little girl, who grew more and more nervous at this dumb admiration.

One morning she found on her desk a package uncannily interesting. It was wrapped in a Chinese gift cloth of golden tissue embroidered in Chinese igures, Removing this the girl discovered a box of papier mache, wrought in wondrous designs of beasts and birds, a regular illustrated delirium tremens of a box. Lifting the lid revealed a thin, white paper, with 'Melican girl' written upon it. Beneath this lay a wealth of sweets, nuts, candies, and dates, prepared in such a way as only the Chinese can, all upside down in a surprising sort of way, with syrup in balls that made you wonder how they were fixed, and all sorts of conglomerations going to make a sweet harmony.

The girl distrusted these enticing things, which goes to prove she was timid enough for a Chinese wife, if fear could make her resist the seductive bon bon so enticing to the female youth of America. But she said she couldn't, and she wouldn't touch the stuff, and so the other employees, first in economy and presenting joy, ate the whole box full.

The Chinaman and the boxes came regularly for several days. The young lady would not touch them, but her comrades enjoyed the gifts too well to doubt them.

regularly for several days. The young lady would not touch them, but her comrades enjoyed the gifts too well to doubt them.

The last visit was a few days ago. He entered the office in a grab the Mikado might have envied, so richly was it embossed and embroidered with things that swam and crawled and flew. In his hand he held a lighted yellow candle that the Chinese use as an hour glass. Placing it before the startled girl at the typewriter, he said, solemnly:

"Maily while light burn."

The girl, in mortal terror of being espoused by some compelling celestial right, snatched the candle and blew it out; and then the Chinaman, showing for the first time some human emotion, left her presence with a face one degree more passionless and solemn. This was the end of a Chinese courtship. The girl has never seen him since.—Atlanta Constitution.

In the House of a Rich Japanese

In the House of a Rich Japanese.

The wealthy Japanese make no display either in the architecture of their houses or in the display of ornaments. In the way of furnishing, their pride is in the delicacy of their mats and the richness of the satin cushions. The chief room in the house of a rich Japanese is thus described: "The salen was about 25 feet long by 15 wide. At one end, in the corner, was a small raised platform in a little niche and on it a fine Imari vase three feet high, holding flowering branches of the cherry tree. Behind, upon the wall, hung a very valuable but very ugiy kakamono of a god. Twelve blue satin fontons lay in two rows upon the floor and three standing lamps stood in a line between. A folding screen was placed to protect us from draught—and that was the entire furniture of the millionaire's drawing-room. The mats' upon the floor were of the whitest and finest straw. The screen was a gorgeous one, with a battle scene painted upon a gold background." The Japanese keep their brica-brac in fire-proof buildings, to be taken out one at a time and admired, and then replaced by another.

A Costly Tomb.

John Crouse, a Syracuse militonaire grocer, who died recently, was laid in what is probably the most costly tomb in the country. The structure is of solid granite, every stone being pera solid granite, every stone being period fect. The stone run through and through the walls, and each has been fitted to its place with mathematical precision. The masonry outside as well as in is as delicate as joiner work in the strictest sense. Nowhere in the roof is there a vertical joint exposed to the sky, thus preventing any possibility of a leak, so often found in such work.

A New Emancipation.

Jim Robinson is telling a story around Toledo which is worth printing. Of course it is about electric street-railways, but that doesn't hurt it. It seems a northern company recently put in an electric road in Nashville, Tenn., and an old darky was showing it to his wife. "Look at it! Look at it!" he said. "Bress the Lord these Yankees are great people. Twenty-five yeahs ago dey come down heat and freed the niggal, and now dey come down and free de mule."—Toledo Blade.

The Thinuxe started as a Democratic sheet, but failed to place the ticket at its mast head until the Progress set it an example.—Friday's Progres.

Set the Trinuxe an example. Friday's Progres.

Set the Trinuxe and example? Well, now, let's see if that statement will stand a test. Wasn't it something in this manner:

The Trinuxe started as a Democratic newspaper, announced the same in its first issue, placed the Democratic national ticket at its mast head upon its second appearance, July 5, 1885, and supported it to the best of our ability during that campaign. And what was the Progress doing in the meantime and for seven years previous? Setting the Trinuxe an example by straddling the political fence (under the guise of independence) until a prospective plum seemed about to pass this way. Then it slipped down, sneaked into the Republican camp and is now prodding the government officials for their slowness in distributing the spoils. Much obliged to the Progress for the example, but the Trinuxe really has no use for such.

But perhaps it was in the last campaign the Progress set the example of which it is so proud. We will see. Compare the two following paragraphs:

The Republican state convention nominated its candidate on August 7 and not until August 30, three weeks and two days after that convention, did the Progress place the candidate's name at its mast head.

The Democratic state convention nominated its candidate on Edmund A. Bigler appeared on the editorial page of the Trinuxe.

We will leave it to the readers to draw their own conclusions of the Progressive claim to setting an example. It will be necessary for it to be more progressive in the future than it has been in the past if it wishes to sustain that claim.

Where Coal is Found.

The following extract is taken from Homer Greene's new book, Coal and the Coal Mines. It gives a good deal of information in small compass:

It will not be out of place here to make mention of the chief territories in which coal is found. Indeed, there are few countries on the globe in which there are not some carboniferous deposits of greater or less extent. Great Britain, with Ireland, has about 12,000 square miles of them. In England alone there is an area of 8139 square miles of workable coal beds. In continental Europe the coal fields are numerous, but the character of the deposit is inferior. Coal is also found in Asiatic countries, in Australia, and in South America; and in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick there is an area of 18,000 square miles of coal measures. The combined areas of coal measures in the United States amount to about 185,000 square miles. The Applachian or Allegheny region contains about 60,000 square miles, miles of the states of Pennsylvania, Virginia, West Virginia, Maryland, Ohio, Kentucky, Tennessee, Georgia and Alabama. The Illinois and Missouri region contains also about 60,000 square miles, and has areas not only in the States named, but also in Indiana, Iowa, Kentucky, Kansas, and Arkansas. Michigan has about 500 and Rhode Island about 500 square miles.

Destroying Their Small Cars.

The Philadelphia and Reading Company intends to destroy all of its 4-wheeled coal cars as rapidly as they are found unfit for service. For some time about 25 cars were burned up daily. This, however, proved rather slow was thand the torch was applied to a heap of 146 cars the other day. There is still a large number of these cars to be burned up and as rapidly as the wheels can be removed they will be destroyed. The old iron is then collected and utilized for other purposes. There were at one time about 8,000 4-wheeled cars used in the coal trade. They were condemned by the company because of the frequent wrecks. They won't stand the pressure. There have been cases where these little 4-wheelers have been cases where these little 4-wheelers have been crushed to atoms between larger and heavier cars. When the cars were built, the locomotives were lighter and the trains did not exceed 135 cars. Now the engines haul from 150 to 170 cars.

Tunnel Through Broad Mountain.

The Reading Railroad officials have under consideration a plan to tunney. Broad Mountain, in Schuylkill County. The east end will be started at a point west of Mineraville and at the west end will be commenced near Gordon. The tunnel will be four miles long, will require at least five years in building, and the cost is estimated at $6,000,000. The cost of main-lining the Gordon and Mahanoy planes by which the coal cars are hoisted to the top of the mountain and then down again on the other side, is $150,000 a year, and it is the intention of the company to do away with these planes eventually. The projected tunnel will be the longest in the eastern section of the state.

The mine inspectors of the anthracite districts were in Harrisburg recently in consultation with Secretary of the Commonwealth Stone in reference to their annual reports. For some years past the inspectors have had a great deal of difficulty in having their reports printed as they were written. Maps and diagrams which illustrated the text were omitted without any regard to references. A better understanding has now been reached, and it is expected this year's report will be printed with some regard to the suggestions of the inspectors.

Heware of This Man's Fate.

'A story is told of a man who was out hunting and met with little success, and just as he was about returning a heavy shower came up, and having no shelter, he crawled in a hollow log, which was barely large enough to admit his body. He remained in this cramped position until the rain was over, but to his surprise the water had caused the log to swell, which made the hole too small for him to get out. This predicament made him review his past life, and think of his sins of omission and commission, and when he thought he'was not a subscriber to his local papers he suddenly felt so small that he crawled out without, any difficulty. The anthracite coal trade continues unchange in any material feature. The Eastern and Western business is dult, there being little new demand for coal of from either quarter. From the South the demand for red ask anthracite (egg. stove and chestnut sizes) has improved somewhat within the past several days, and the Reading Company on Saturday received some orders for coal from Hall-fax, Nova Scotia. The Southern shipments are now being made by water, owing to the embarge placed on all-rail shipments by the Baltimore and Ohio and the Pennsylvania Railroads, which roads are said to be so erowded with general merchandise traffic of a higher cannot at present be spared to haul coal trains. Coal shippers are complaining that the markets of Baltimore and Washington and other points on the lines of the two railraods leading to those cities have been practically shut off from receiving cargoes of anthracite for the past week or two.

While there has not been much new business originating from that quarter for some time past, yet there are many old orders still unfilled, and the buyers are now pressing the operators for the delivery of the coal.
