Night Attack of a Torpedo Boat on a Big Warshp.

The opportunity comes—a dark night and tempestuous. The clouds have covered the stars like a pall, and there is a howling wind which drowns all other sounds. The pyrmy seel makes ready and puts to sea. It rushes along as swift as the wind and as silent as a caim. Big waves sometimes sweep over it from end to end as it plunges through the dark ness, but they are not heeded. Small as it is, it is stanchly built and can stand the strain of storm as well as its adversary. All men save one are snugly shut inside, tending the flying engine and preparing the missile of destruction. This is a strange bolt, shaped like a cigar, over ten feet in length; and the crew place it in the bow tube. The man on deck stands behind a little iron tower which shields him from the shock of the waves, and there he steers the boat. In the darkness they seek their adversary determinedly, and with deadly purpose, since they are the protectors of their native land. The boat searches for a time in vain, for the big ship has covered all lights and is lying like a sleeping monster upon the waves, awaiting morning to renew the havoe. Perhaps if the ship remained thus, the little loat would never find her; but "Goliath" becomes uneasy; he fears "David" will make an attack, so he has determined to watch. A dazzling cone of white light suddenly starts from a point in the darkness, and broadens upon the water. Slowly it sweeps about over the sea in circling ares. All at once the little boat is bathed in a brilliant, blinding glare. The monster's eye finds it! But in finding the enemy he battle-ship has disclosed itself, and the dauntless little adversary steams straight forward at utness to the finding reports of rifles and machinegus sharply above the wind's roar, shot and small shell are falling about like haily long, showy, overpowering. It is not far off, almost near enough to be at the first of the mark.

Suddenly the great ship looms up, tall, long, showy, overpowering. It is not far off, almo their native land. The boat searches for a time in vain, for the big ship has covered all lights and is lying like a sleeping monster upon the waves, awaiting moraing to renew the have. Perhaps if the ship remained thus, the little boat would never find her; but "doilath" becomes uneasy; he fears "David" will make an attack, so he has determined to watch. A dazzling cone of white light suddionly starts from a point in the light suddionly starts from a point in the light suddionly starts from a point in the closed itself, and the dauntless little adversary steams straight forward at utmost speed. Strakes of flame are now shooting from under the white light, while he rattling reports of rifles and maching unside the startling unside the startling reports of rifles and machine unside the startling unside center on Long Island, if not in this country. Byron Tuthill, of that pretty village, speaking of this feathered industry, said:

"For the scason just ended, I have no doubt that the shipment of ducks from Speonk has reached forty thousand. All the fowl raised there are for the market. The Pekin variety of ducks seems to be the favorite with raisers. Some Muscovy are raised, but they do not grow so rapidly nor become so large as the Pekin, though they are, it is said, a more hardy breed. Hardihood is a very important matter, as a great many ducks die when young from cholera, or are chilled by the cold weather. The price generally returned from New York is from 7s cents to $1 for each duck. On this basis Speonk has received nearly $410,000 this year for this husiness alone. The raisers begin to set their eggs in incubt tors or under hens about the middle of January, and the first ducks are ready for the New York market about the last of April. They then weigh from three to five pounds. They are picked before shipment, and the feathers are scalded and sold at the close of the season. It is expected that the price of the feathers will pay for the cost of picking. Since the charge of picking is from four to five cents, it is easy to calculate what it costs to strip 40,000 ducks of their clothes. Incubators are used by all large raisers, and, properly handled, they produce excellent results. The picking of the fowl is quite an industry, and many of the girls engaged in it have made from $100 to $200 in this way. Miss Annie Liscomb and Miss Hettie Homan seem to have made the best record Each has picked about 3,000 ducks, the former having prepared forty-seven for market in one day. "—[New York Star.

invited the Crowd to Eat Oranges

Yesterday T. A. Melter purchased 5,000 sweet oranges and placed them on Colcord's wharf, foot of Occan street, for free distribution. The only proviso was that the cater should quarter the fruit and place the peels in a barrel of alcohol standing near. About 4,000 of the oranges were eaten by the surrounding crowd, and Mr. Melter got a goodly amount of work done for nothing. The peeling will be shipped to England to be used for medicinal purposes.—[Florida Times-Union. Times-Union.

BECBARS IN TANGIER.

Philosophical Tramps and Mendi-

Contrast the shivering, badgered existence of the English beggar with the pleasant life of a Moorish member of the craft. For the nuth part of a penny, which the fractional copper coinage of his country supplies him in the shape of blanquies, one hundred and fifty to the franc, the beggar of Morocco can keep his rag of soul and body very comfortably together for the day.

The sunshine alone represents meat and drink and clothes and coppers to that fortunate individual. No inexorable "peeler" bids him move on, for there is no statute in his land to proclaim begging a misdemeanor. There is so much comfort in the sunshine that he does not feel impelled to create an artificial warmth within him at the bar of the nearest house of call when Charity has paused to drop a penny in his greasy bat.

Nor, for that matter, has he any greasy chapeau in hand for the reception of penn'orths of compassion from passers-by; and let this be recorded to his credit, that to whatever depth of poverty he may by reduced, he never sinks to the indignity of cast-off clothing.

Much more Saxon than Moor, in appearance at any rate, is the red-haired blind beggar lad who is generally to be seen hurrying and blundering at a reckless speed through the crowded streets, going nowhere in pacticular at a head-long pace, which, if he enjoyed the use of his eyes, he would hardly dare attempt. It has been suggested, not without some show of probability, that he derives his carroty locks and Saxon face from some forefather of his of English birth, who in the good piratical days may have fallen into the hands of Moorish sea-rovers, turned renegade to save his life, and completed his domestication by taking unto himself a Moslem woman to wife. This boy has picked up a trifle of pigeon-English and turns it to account in supplicating alms: "Givee penny to povero blindo?" If he coverhears you conversing in English in the street, he fastens himself on you, lays hold of you by whatever article of attire he can clutch, and will on no account let go till you ate. Here, as into a harbor of refuge, drift Here, as into a harbor of refuge, drift the beggarly remnants of decayed mendicants, and coiling themselves up within their jelabs, only leaving their feet sticking out in some chosen blot of sunshine, steep away the memory of their woes; and if it do not offend you to stand beside one of these sackfuls of humanity, observe narrowly the protruding feet, and you will see the toes open and shut from time to time, like the claws of lobsters, in the excessive enjoyment of the warmth and the siesta.

Suddenly, provoked at last out of all

Siesta.

Studenly, provoked at last out of all patience, one of the sleepers wakes and sits up in a fury of resentment, plunged his hand down deep into the folds of his ragged robe, and after a brief but determined resistance on the part of the flea, drags it out in triumph and having flung it away from him, subsides again into his rage and doze.

Galvanoplasty.

Galvanoplasty.

We scarcely know whether the notion of keeping deceased relatives hundreds of years after they have gone over to the majority will appear a pleasant one to most people; but it is stated that there is a doctor living in Paris who claims to have discovered a method of so doing, to which he gives the name of galvanoplasty. Six months, he has stated to an interviewer, he has been working solely on the subject of galvanoplastiques, and in proof of what he has achieved he brought forth the body of an infant, obtained from one of the hospitals, which was perfect in every way, the features being quite recognizable, but which seemed to be made of brass. The process consists, we read, first in embalming the body which is intended to be kept, after which it is placed in a bath of concentrated solution of nitrate of silver, from which, having undergone sundry other operations, it comes out the color of polished silver. Electricity is then brought into play, and a very thin layer of copper deposited on the features, which are afterwards vanished, a thorough resemblance to the original being the aim kept steadily in view. To copper an infant the cost, says the doctor, would be about $60 or $80. and for a grown person from $600 to $800. He added that, once coppered, if relations could afford it, nothing would be easier than to have the body silvered or gilded according to taste, and in this statue-like form have their dead relatives constantly around them. The doctor says there is nothing repulsive in the process; but that is a matter of opinion.—[London Standard.

The people of the Knickerbocker Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church, Brook lyn, N. Y., have resorted to something absolutely rew. The edifice was opened on Sunday last, and when the congregation entered the building they found five canaries in as many bright, new wire cages, hanging in a straight line across the centre of the auditorium, about affecten feet above the heads of the worshipers. The birds twittered and sang all through the morning services, but no one seemed to object to them. Even the preacher appeared to forget their chirping during the delivery of his sermon.

Women in Wall Street.

The widow of E. A. Pollard, the historian of the Southern Confederacy, has opened in Wall street a broker's office for the accommodation of women who deal in stocks. It is a curious fact that no woman who has opened a stock speculator's office has as yet been permanently successful. Some, like Hetty Green, have been shrewd outside buyers and made money, but so far as I know those who have opened regular offices for stock transactions have one and all lost money, and quit the business. Perhaps this is, after all, a compliment to women in one way,—[New York Letter.

Talking of patent medicines
—you know the old prejudice.
And the doctors—some of them are between you and us. They would like you to think that what's cured thousands won't cure you.
