Quite as celebrated in his wey as Robin Hood or Dick Turpin was Morgan, the bushranger, who brought to his nefarious occupation a species of grim humor better appreciated by himself than his victims. He became an artist in aggravation, and white he stole people's money, or, worse still, their horses, he took special pains to do it in the most provoking way. The following are a few of the stories told about him: The overseer of a run was visiting one of the shepherd's huts; on entering, he saw a man lying on the bunk. "What are you doing here?" he said. "Turn out of this!" The next thing he knew, a revolver was unpleasantly near his head. "Throw up your hands or I'll put daylight through you," remarked a drawhing voice in a by-the-way sort of manner. "Bail up in that corner." The man obeyed. Morgan then bound him, and mounting, led him ignominously to a post. Having tied him up securely, he went on to the head station, where he found the owner sitting at a table. Covering him with his revolver he coolly proceeded to eat his dinner, after which he possessed himself of numerous valuables and rode away. Not long after this Morgan stuck up a station both the owners of which were quite young fellows. The men were drafting cattle in the stockyard when Morgan rode up. "Bail up, all you fellows in a row along-side that fence there," was the bushranger's order. Such an invitation was not to be gainsaid. Having got all his prisoners together, Morgan sat one of his men to keep guard, and proceeded to take possession of the two best horses and destroy all arms and ammunition. Morgan's next was to stick up a woolshed at shearing time, and order the overseer against whom he had a grudge, to come and kneel down to be shot. The man's wife rushed out and threw herself before her husband, imploring Morgan to shoot her instead. He told the man that he might "clear out," which gracious permission needed not to be repeated. He then amused himself by standing over the owner and making him sign checks for all the shearers, and thous h

Milk-Shops in Berlin.
All over the city are what are called "molkeris" or milk stations. In the basement of an elegant block of buildings a few cows are kept. These are well kept and cared for and furnish excellent milk for the patrons in the neighborhood. They water the cows insteed of the milk, and it is a better mality than most city milk.—German quality than most city milk.—German Letier in the Washinaton Post.
