WHILE flying South a flock of wild geese were attracted by a number of tame ones sporting on Lake Keuka, near Hammondsport, N. Y., and halting in their flight descended and joined forces with their domestic congeners. The owner of the tame fowls, a farmer named Purdy, on seeing the wild geese alight,

If no acts of violence or bloodshed have been committed nor any extensive disturbances taken place, and the problem is simply the dispersion of a disorderly and turbulent gathering, the slow advance of troops in rear, or in support, of the police is advised, thus giving opportunity to the idle and curious, the women and children, to disontangle themselves from the crowd. The playing of a stream of water upon the assemblage by means of a fire engine will not infrequently be found a thoroughly effective means of cecuring its dispersal. Getting we is dispiriting; the babble reputation is not to be sought at the nozzle of a hose pipe; the soaked rioter is an object of ridicule rather than admiration, and is more apt to be laughed at by his whilom associates than regarded as a here and followed to the death.—General Molineux.

"Helped a man to jump his board bill, you say?"
"That's what I say, and in my own hotel, too."
The speaker was a retired hotel keeper in a Western city.
"You see, it happened this way: He was a smooth talking, plausible fellow, who claimed to be agent for the sale of vast mineral lands in Colorado. When he first registered his name, Colonel Jones, Denver, he had a big, gold-headed cane under his left arm as he wrote, with the head turned toward me so that I couldn't help reading the inscription:

BY HIS OLD COMRADES IN ARMS.

When Houdin, having acquired a comfortable fortune, retired into private life, he built a handsome villa and amused himself by introducing various curious inventions into his place and the grounds attached to it. The garden gate was situated some 400 yards from the house. A visitor had only to raise a diminutive brass knecker and let it fall upon the forehead of a fantastic face—making but a faint sound—when a large bell was set in motion in the villa. At the same time the gate swung open automatically, the plate bearing the name 'Robert Houdin' disappeared, and another took its place on which was engraved the word "Entrez." When the postman delivered the letters he had brought he was instructed to drop them through a slit in the gate into the receptacle provided for this purpose. The box, directly this was done, started of its own accord on its journey to the front door of the house by means of a miniature clevated railway. He also invented a contrivance by which, while lying in bed, he could feed his horse in a stable fifty yards from the villa, for on touching a small button there was put in motion an apparatus that caused the exact portion of cats required for the animal's meal to fall into the manger from the granary above. By another curious piece of mechanism a little bench that stood beside a ravine in a remote part of the grounds was so constructed that immediately any person sat down upon it the machine automatically traversed a narrow bridge that spanned the gorge, and having deposited the occupant on the other side the bench returned to its original position. This rather reminds one of the ingenious devices with which John Wemmick delighted to please "The Aged." "That established a sort of credit for him, don't you see, for it was not long after the war, and a Colonel was a pretty big fellow. Well, he staid a week and his bill was presented to him. He made some excuse for delay—remittances hadu't arrived, or something. Another week passed and it was the same thing, until he had put up with me about a month without putting up a cent. I was getting uneasy, but he was the slickest talker you ever see.

"One day I suddenly came upon the Colonel descending the stairs, carpetbag in hand. A suspicion flashed across my mind that he was making a sneak, but he said in the casiest, coolest way imaginable, 'Captain, I have lost the key to my carpet-beg; can you direct me to a store where I can get another key fitted to it?"

"'Certainly,' said I, for he was so genial and polite that my suspicions were dissipated, 'come along and I will show you."

There is more Catarch, in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed recurs with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarch to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires curvalled to the constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional disease, and therefore requires control of the constitutional curvalled. Eggs in Manufactures and the Arts.

It is an error, says Bradstreet's, to suppose that eggs have no considerable use except for food. They are employed in calico printing, in photography, in gilding, in clarifying various liquors, and in bookbinding. A large business has sprun, up in the preparation of photographic paper with salted abbumen, and one establishment alone is said to have used more than 2,000,000 eggs in six months for this purpose. Many attempts have been made to find a vegetable or animal substitute for albumen, bitt in vain. A prize of $2,000, offered thirty years ago by an English society for the discovery of a material or process for replacing albumen in calico printing, still remains untaken. Nor are the yolks of eggs used in manufacturing wholly wasted. They are also employed in the arts, and a manufacturer in Vienna solidifies them. Possibly, too, the developments in canning will before long give us cauned eggs, or perhaps condensed eggs, suitable at least for cooking. At any rate it would seem worth while to try to raise part of the eggs which are consumed by other countries.
