

HIS FIRST ELEPHANT.

Laughable Scenes in a Menagerie at Cork.

An American travelling in Europe last summer wandered aimlessly into an enclosure at Cork, where a travelling menagerie chanced to be exhibiting a collection of animals, among which was a ponderous Indian elephant, a cage of chattering monkeys and a few other living curiosities.

There was nothing unusual about the show. In fact, it was rather a poor exhibition. One man in the throng, however, attracted the gentleman's attention and he paused a moment to observe him.

The man was a typical Handy Andy from the Cork district who had never visited a city before nor seen anything more extraordinary in the shape of a quadruped than his own pet pig and the domestic animals of his landlord.

He paused with wonderment before the elephant, eyeing it with suspicion and keeping it at a respectful distance as he surveyed the beast. At last his native curiosity got the better of him.

Uncovering his head and peering at his shaggy forelock he said, in a whisper of awe tempered with respect, but in the richest Irish brogue imaginable:—"I'm after axing yer 'One's pardin' and that might be? Sure the two eyes of me niver rested on the likes of that before or since."

The gentleman explained that the animal was an elephant and harness beast, and to illustrate the point approached the creature and reached forth his hand containing a bit of something palatable, which the animal conveyed to his mouth with his trunk.

The fishman, somewhat reassured at the action, stepped before the elephant enclosure, gazing at the curious anatomy and ponderous bulk of the animal. The latter, not understanding the fixed stare of the man and anxious for another bit of food, reached out his sinuous trunk, and inserting it into the fishman's pocket drew forth a huge pig of tobacco, and swallowed it with the same equanimity that he had the candies and other delicacies.

"Pat did not relish losing his tobacco. 'Ah, ye haythen thief!' he remarked, shaking his clenched fist at the elephant. Then in high dudgeon he turned on his heel with the intention of visiting the cage of chattering monkeys and other curiosities.

Scarcely had he turned when the elephant, whose palate revolted at the taste of the noxious weed, swung his trunk, and catching the man across the shoulders sent him sprawling upon the ground.

The blow, following the theft of the tobacco, infuriated the man, and springing to his feet he cried in a rage, "And ye would be after striking me, ye chavv, murdering lump of blackness! I'll pay yer well for the dishonor of a blow, ye misbegotten brute, and if I could till which en yer trail was on now I'd punch yer snoot."—[New York Herald.]

RESTITUTION.

In the meantime he asked his late employer to look after his family, stating that his wife was innocent. The merchant made inquiries, and heard nothing but what was favorable as to the character of the woman, whom he found in the repair after reading a letter similar to the one he had received. He gave her a cheque for $350, saying he would assume that the man had defrauded him to the extent of $1,500, which he would place to the debit of his account. The wife is thus relieved from any immediate want and the merchant is offered to interest himself further on behalf of the family.—[Yankee Blade.]

A NIHILIST'S ESCAPE.

How Stepniak's Glib Tongue Got Him Out of Trouble.

Sergius Stepniak, the Russian revolutionary leader, is lecturing in this country. His lecture consists chiefly of anecdotes from his own experience as a Nihilist. Among the more interesting is that of his first arrest.

With a crowd he was found at midnight among the peasants teaching them his unlawful ideas and making friends as well as converts. Four policemen took them to a village on the way to a prison set apart for political offenders, and stopped there for the night. Then came friends from among the peasants bringing many bottles of Russian brandy to the police, so that by midnight each officer was dead drunk and the prisoners were free to run. They ran, hoping to reach a larger place some distance away, and there got horses to carry them to a railroad station. They undertook to cross a swamp to save distance. It was a freezing night, but the ice was in places too thin to bear their weight, so that they frequently fell into the water waist deep, and their clothing became stiff with ice.

Worse than all they lost their way, and after two and a half hours came out on a highway, but half an hour's walk from the place they had escaped from. It was now some daylight that horses must be procured and recapture was inevitable, and yet they feared that if they applied for help in this village they would find some one who would recognize them.

There was no help for it, however, and they at once went to a house where a light was seen. A party enjoying a dance was found there. He probably thought the first man the party was constant with them under arrest. He looked at them suspiciously, but Stepniak walked up and greeted him enthusiastically.

"But I saw you under arrest yesterday," said the constable.

"Certainly; but it was all a mistake. An order came from the Government ordering our release. Here is the order. We wait horses," and Stepniak pulled out a copy of a song he had made, trusting that the constable was illiterate. And so he was; but he was sharp enough to demand that the escaped prisoners go to the village clerk, who could read.

At this Stepniak and his friend determined to fight rather than be recaptured, but before there was a necessity for that a girl said the clerk had gone to a wedding. That was good news, for he was sure to be drunk, and so away they went, found him so, and then, having passed his stupid scrutiny, they mounted horses and fled to a railroad station a mile further away than they thought to have gone. Instead of taking a train that would carry them further away, they took a train that carried them back near the scene of their escape—they doubled on their track. At one station they saw a crowd of officers watching for them, but no search was made in the cars, and they reached another friends in safety.

As described by Stepniak the life of a political outlaw is one of thrilling excitement until he is captured; then he is executed, commits suicide, becomes insane, or quickly dies of hardships in prison or exile in Siberia.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

ETHEER-DRINKING has become so prevalent in Ireland that the Lord Lieutenant has scheduled ether as poison, to be sold only by chemists. The habit started in Drogheda, and claims 78,852 slaves. It acts three as quickly from drunk to sober as other spirits, and resembles the euphoric habit in the resulting moral paralysis.

Among the curiosities of recent will-making is the bequest of the late Mr. John Noble, the English millionaire varnish manufacturer, of an annual income to his son, Mr. Wilson Noble, the present member of Parliament for Hastings, with the proviso that $10,000 a year shall at once be struck off if he should fail to be re-elected.

SIBER-BAKING, if one may judge by the case of a young New York woman, is rather profitable, after all. Her brother had some money invested in sheep in Utah, and induced his sister to put $1,500 into the investment with him. This was two years ago. She sold her share of the sheep several weeks ago to her brother, who was increasing his holdings. She received a cheque for $3,500 not a bad return on a two-year investment.

THE MOST LONELY pawnshop in the world is the Monti di Pieti in Rome, established in 1585. Any person who brings a pawn may borrow from $12 to $20 without paying any interest, but all that is loaned above that is paid at the rate of 2 per cent. per annum. At the end of two years, if the pledge is not redeemed, the interest of the money paid, the pledge is sold, and the overplus of the debt is laid by the owner who has it in his power to demand it within 100 years.

STANLEY has now given up an opinion which he entertained when he set out in search of Livingstone. He was then led to believe by the natives that a white or light-colored people would be found somewhere in central Africa. Several of the tribes had traditions of the existence of such a people there, and Dr. Livingstone himself heard of these traditions during his African wanderings. Stanley became convinced during his recent explorations that there is no white native race to be found in the central regions of the Dark Continent.

RELIGION OF JAPANESE WOMEN

A Complicated Cult, Which Confuses Even the Priests.

The religion of the Japanese women must appear very complicated and confused to their little giddy brains, when even the most learned priests of the country lose themselves in their cosmogony, their symbols, their metamorphoses of gods in the millenary chaos upon which the Buddhism of India has so strangely foisted itself without destroying anything. Their most serious cult seems to be that of their defunct ancestors. These shades or familiar gods possess in each household a performed altar, before which the living pray long ere morning and night, without, however, believing absolutely in the immortality of the soul, and in the persistence of the ego as understood by our Occidental religions.

To the religious contradictions which baffle us must be added superstitions as old as the world, the strangest or the gloomiest, and fearful to listen to at night. Beings half gods and half ghosts haunt the black darkness; at crowsy in the woods stand ancient idols gifted with singular powers; there are miraculous stones in the depths of forests. And to have an approximate idea of these women, with small oblique eyes, one must reduce to chaos all that I have just said, then try to transpose it into giddy brains that laugh and prevent the most of the time from thinking, and that seem at moments to have the heedlessness of the brains of birds.

Withal, they are assiduous in their attendance at all the pilgrimages, which are constant, at all the ceremonies and festivals in the temples. During the fair or three times a month, from all corners of the country to pagodas deliciously situated in the country, covering the little roads, the little bridges, with the incessant passing of their marine blue dresses, and with the wide shells of their black head-dresses.

In big cities, on almost every summer evening, there is a pilgrimage to some sanctuary or other, in honor of a god so ancient that nobody remembers exactly his role in the world. After business of all kinds, with its bargains and barbers, has been suspended, after the innumerable petty trades have stopped their monotonous noise, when the myriads of little houses and shops begin to put up their light shutters, the women dress themselves in their hair with their most extravagant pins, and set out, holding at the end of flexible sticks great painted lanterns. The streets are filled to overflowing with their little persons, ladies or mousmies, walking slowly in sandals and exchanging charming courtesies. With an immense number of fluttering ornaments of rustling silks and of laughing chatter, at dusk, by the light of the moon, or beneath the starry night, they ascend to the pagoda, where gigantic gods with horrible masks await them, half hidden behind bars of gold, in the incredible magnificence of the sanctuaries. They bring pieces of money to the priests, they pray prostrated and clapping their hands with sharp blows, clack, clack, as though their fingers were of wood. But most of the time they are chattering, turning around, thinking of something else, attempting to escape by laughter from the fear of the supernatural.—Pierre Loti, in Harper's Magazine.

"August Flower"

Mrs. Sarah M. Black of Seneca, Mo., during the past two years has been affected with Neuralgia of the Head, Stomach and Womb, and writes: "My food did not seem to strengthen me at all and my appetite was very variable. My face was yellow, my head dull, and I had such pains in my left side. In the morning when I got up I would have a flow of mucus in the mouth, and a bad, bitter taste. Sometimes my breath became short, and I had such queer, tumbling, palpitating sensations around the heart. I tached all day under the shoulder blades, in the left side, and down the back of my limbs. It seemed to be worse in the wet, cold weather of Winter and Spring; and whenever the spells came on, my feet and hands would turn cold, and I could get no sleep at all. I tried every where, and got no relief before using August Flower. Then the change came. It has done me a wonderful deal of good during the time I have taken it and is working a complete cure."

The Forgotten Employee.

A successful business man says there were two things which he learned when he was eighteen which were afterward of great use to him, namely: "Never to lose anything, and never to forget anything."

An old lawyer sent him with an important paper with certain instructions what to do with it. "But," inquired the young man, "suppose I lose it, what shall I do then?"

"You must not lose it,"

"I don't mean to," said the young man, "but suppose I should happen to?"

"But I say you must not happen to; I shall make no provision for such an occurrence; you must not lose it!"

This put a new train of thought into the young man's mind, and he found that if he was determined to do a thing he could do it. He made such a provision against every contingency that he never lost anything. He found this equally true about forgetting. If a certain matter of importance was to be remembered, he pinned it down in his mind, fastened it there and made it stay. He used to say: "When a man tells me he forgot to do something, I tell him he might as well have said: 'I do not care enough about your business to take the trouble to think about it again.'"

Once had an intelligent young man in my employ who deemed it sufficient excuse for neglecting any important task to say: "I forgot it." I told him that would not answer. If he was sufficiently interested, he would be careful to remember. It was because he did not care enough that he forgot it. I drilled him with this truth. He worked for me three years, and during the last of the three he was utterly ignorant of this respect. He did not forget a thing. His forgetting, he found, was a lazy, careless habit of the mind, which he cured.—American Grocer.

Artificial Oyster Beds.

The oyster planters of the Long Island Sound are taking limestone from the Hudson River with which to make oyster beds on which spawn can attach itself. These planters first used all the oyster shells they could get from towns along the sound, and then from New York. Then they brought them from the shalloes from Maryland. The oyster shells, however, broke up rapidly and were washed away, and it was found necessary to resort to limestone, which is found to make a permanent bed.—[Baltimore (Md.) Trade.]
