

The Manufacturer in its current number publishes the advertisements of three shoddy mills, which are located in Philadelphia. After a while the Manufacturer will learn, perhaps, that a great deal of shoddy is manufactured for clothing in this country. The next thing to learn would be that the Plague of Shoddy has been greatly aggravated by the duties on wool. Our American manufacturers do not use rags in making clothes from choice, but from necessity. Free wool is the most pressing economical need of the day.

A REPORT was published in the city papers yesterday stating that three Russians arrived at New York and were detained at the Barge Office because of a violation of the contract labor law, as they had come here to work in the mines at Stockton, this county. The story has not been verified but it would not require much information to convince the public that it is true. The fact is well known that the majority of foreigners in this State at present were brought here by the coal corporations, but why they should import these three, when hundreds of men could be gotten throughout the region to fill any position that might be vacant about the mines, is something that cannot be very easily understood.

THERE are two sides to the rain-making stories sent out from Texas. George Edward Curtis, an assistant in the Smithsonian Institution, Washington, who was present at Dyerforth's Texas experiments, says that only two one-hundredths inches of rain fell during three weeks of experiment, and the explosions had nothing to do with the production of rain. There were showers all over Texas on the day the rain fell at the experiment station. This is an almost complete contradiction of previous reports on the same experiments, and is of special importance, because Congress will surely be asked to make a big appropriation to continue experiments in rain-making in spite of the small support such experiments receive from meteorologists.

At the meeting of the Republican National Committee in Washington on Monday it was decided to hold the Presidential Convention on June 7, of next year, in Minneapolis, Minnesota. The selection of this place was made against large odds offered by various other cities in the Union, but it was done with the hope of pleasing the people of the West and capturing the vote of the Western States. One of the notable events of the meeting was the enthusiasm indulged in when Secretary Blaine's name was mentioned in connection with the Presidency, and it was intimated that if the opinion of the convention should be the same as that of the committee the Plumed Knight would be nominated by acclamation. Senator Quay resigned from the chairmanship and his place was taken by General Clarkson.

The present outlook is that the third party movement will cut no figure in the next campaign. The recent elections in the West have shown a great collapse in the Farmers' Alliance, and it nowhere asserted itself potently, apart from the two great parties. Its vote in Kansas, which was supposed to be its great stronghold, fell off tremendously this year, and so far as heard from, it failed to carry a single county. The aggregation which styles itself the People's Party polled a ridiculously small number of votes where it had a ticket in the field at all, and showed no signs of vitality anywhere. The chances are, therefore, that the next great quadrennial election will witness a square contest between the two great parties, and nothing in the shape of a side show, with the possible exception of the cold water advocates, who are likely to still cling to their forlorn hope.

The Hazleton newspapers and many prominent citizens are making a determined fight to carry out the wishes of the people of our neighboring town, which they emphasized at the last election, by declaring to have the borough governed under a city charter. The measure was carried by a large majority, but, notwithstanding this, it was declared invalid by a member of the Town Council. The opposition is based on a mere technicality—because a notice of the election was not published in all the town papers—and it is alleged that much influence was brought to bear in the matter by the saloon men of the town, who have steadily opposed the city charter act. However this may be the majority of the Council has avowed its purpose to have the charter issued and sent a committee to Harrisburg on Monday to further that end. They made a statement before the Secretary of the Commonwealth, but as only their side of the matter was presented, a decision was reserved for next week.

Society and the Criminal.
"Society and the Criminal" was the title of an address delivered last week by Hon. Richard Vaux, of Philadelphia. Mr. Vaux, like many others who speak on this subject, is of the opinion that the ruffled state of society is the cause of most crimes, and believes that present conditions should be moderated, but does not give any suggestions as to how this should be done.
He said: "Society is the habitat of crime. Naturally and necessarily so. Association tends to liberate the action of those who intend to prey on the personal rights and property of individuals. Crime is an intention crystallized into fact. Motive, will and action are co-existent. The motive being the primary agent it is important to ask the origin of its existence. The motive originates a deliberate purpose. It is the intention to violate law, so well considered as to define the consideration in the act, which is crime. Whence is it that the motive originates? The individual must of necessity be under some mental influence that tends to create the motive. This suggests the consideration of the crime cause."
"How is the criminal to be punished unless it is to search back to the motive, and apply a correction that shall be wise? The antecedents must be studied. It is more than likely that the facts attending the commission of the act would be best understood from the antecedents of the criminal. Crimes of the passions, crimes of education, crimes from inherent causes and crimes from association need special and diverse treatment. This is the basis of philanthropic prison discipline. Incarceration is only the condition in which punishment can be administered. Incarceration per se is not punishment. The mental, physical and moral characteristics of the criminal must be investigated."
Mr. Vaux told how crime had increased to startling proportions, and laid the responsibility at the door of society itself, because of the mawkish sentimentality of the general public and the so-called prison philanthropist. Continuing he said: "A report by the clerk of the Criminal Court, of Salem, Mass., stated that one person in every 722 was a criminal and a prisoner. Criminals have increased since 1888 more than 50-fold—from 850 criminals in that year to 44,968 in 1890. From the last official report it appears that out of 33,290 persons committed last year, 17,667 were known as recidivists; a total of 158 had been recommitted 50 times, and 397 persons more than 30 times. These are the results of an entire change of system, a system declared to be punitive and reformatory. In the wind of mere talk, in the whirlwind of vociferous, ignorant criticism, we must not look for the remedy, but in the still, small voice of intelligent, thoroughly instructed, courageous conscience of society."

A Tariff Reform Object.
The discovery of a conspiracy by which the Anchor Pottery at Trenton, N. J., has during the past six years, been robbed of goods to the amount of $100,000, furnishes an object lesson in protection. Although the stealings have been going on for a long time, it is only recently that any suspicion of crookedness was aroused. It is not claimed that the discovery was due to any shrinkage in the profits, therefore it is but natural that, despite the extensive thefts, the firm has steadily been making money. The proprietor found out that some one was underselling him in Philadelphia with their own fine wares, and this is what led to the investigation which disclosed the conspiracy.
The estimate of the theft is placed at from $75,000 to $100,000. Take it at the former figure and it represents a loss annually of over $12,000. This seems like a very large sum for the invoice clerk to get away with annually for over five years without the slightest suspicion being raised. But the proprietor was probably satisfied with his large profits, and the fact that only when the thieves became extremely bold was any crookedness suspected, goes to show how large the profits must be. When $12,000 per annum can be stolen from a large manufacturing establishment without it being missed it is safe to assume that the pottery business is pretty profitable for an infant industry which McKinley was so anxious to protect.

The Tariff Killing Industries.
One of the queer effects of the McKinley tariff is that it will either "make" or "break" the industries of the country. It has made many manufacturing establishments—made them rich and profitable at the expense of those who consume their wares—and has also broke a considerable number owing to the excessive duties on the material which they manufactured into different commodities for an existence. The iron business, especially, has suffered considerably on account of the over-taxed raw material used in this line of industry, and as a consequence, many firms have dropped from life. Failure after failure was recorded for several months after the McKinley law went into effect, and occasionally we hear of some even in this late day of alleged protective prosperity. Last week one of the largest iron manufacturing firms in New England collapsed because they could not buy their raw material as cheaply as foreign producers, and were, therefore, unable to compete with them in the market. But still, after all the repudiations the law has received in this way, its advocates claim that it builds up home industries and that it will eventually benefit the productive classes by insuring them large compensation for their work. Won't some protection organ tell the public just how long they are to wait for this era of prosperity promised them by tariff legislators?

"Seeing is Believing."
And a good lamp must be simple; when it is not simple it is not good. Simple, Beautiful, Good—these words mean much, but to see "The Rochester" will impress the truth more forcibly. All metal, tough and seamless, and made in three pieces only, it is absolutely safe and unbreakable. Like Aladdin's of old, it is indeed a "wonderful lamp," for its marvelous light is purer and brighter than gas light, softer than electric light and more cheerful than either.
Look for this stamp—THE ROCHESTER. If the lamp dealer has not the genuine Rochester, and the style you want, send to us for our new illustrated catalogue and we will send you a lamp safely by express—your choice of over 2,000 varieties from the Largest Lamp Store in the World.
