Queer Episodes and Thrilling Adventures Which Show that Truth Is Stranger than Fiction.

The Kansas "wolf-drive" is a great institution, for it satisfies the natural craving of man to kill something without exposing himself to danger, and it is therefore exceedingly popular. In the townships of Walnut, Sherman, Grant, and Crawford wolves and foxes, which multiply alarmingly fast, have been driven by the severe cold this winter to nets of depredation surprising for their boldness and ferceity. The farmers have risen up and organized for the purpose of clearing the country of the fourfooted raiders. Upwards of 4,000 men engage in the wolf-drive, and they bear over a tract ten miles square. The affair is conducted with military exactness and discipline. A general is chosen, and he in turn picks out his staff and battalion and company commanders. The signal for starting is a fusillade of shots fired by the leaders of each squad. With 1,000 men on each side of the signal for starting is a fusillade of shots fired by the leaders of each squad. With leaders of about fifty feet. The lines are supposed to move one mile each half hour. Every man has a horn or a drum, and his instructions are to make as much noise as he can. Wolves are not to be killed until rounded up in the common centre. They may be clubbed into a run if necessary. At a distance of one mile from the centre the report of a cannon announces that the battle is about to begin, and the forces are aligned and put in readiness. Only such of the hunters as are designed by the general carry firearms; the others are armed with clubs to prevent the beasts from escaping. A great number of wolves are often rounded up, and when the word is given they are picked off by the appointed sharpshooters. While the "drive" is the occasion for a good deal of fun, killing is the business of the day, and the best marksmen attend to this.

A stork of heroism is told among the usually prosaic announcements of the London Gazette in explanation of the services for which the Queen has conferred the decoration of the Albert medal of the second class on George Hoar, boatman of the Tynemouth Coastguard Station. On the occasion of the wreck of the sechooner Peggy during a severe gale with a very heavy sea, after four men had been rescued from the wreck by means of the rocket apparatus, the Captain of the Peggy informed the chief officer of the coastguard that there was another man still on board the wreck in a disabled state, he having fallen out of the rigging on to the deek of the vessel in attempting to get into the breaches buoy. George Hoar immediately volunteered tog off to the wreck and bring the man on shore and was hauled off to the wreck, a distance of one hundred and fifty yards, through the heavy sea in face of a tremendous gale from the southeast. He found on arriving at the vessel that he could not reach the man owing to the hawser having been secured fourteen feet above the deck (where the man lay helpless and in an unconscious state). He then signaled to be hauled on shore again, to confer with the chief officer; shortly afterward he was again the man out of the man was eased so as to allow him (in brecches buoy) to reach the man on deck. As the man was perfectly helpless George Hoar, with his legs seized the man round the body and held him with both hands by his coat collar, and in this manner the two men were safely hauled on shore, the sea at times washing completely over them.

The Juniata Valley Sentinel says that on one of the cold mornings during the cold spell a large hawk pounced upon one of Benjamin Haller's tame ducks that at the time were in a pool of fresh, unfrozen water in the canal bed a short distance beyond the "third lock" at Macedonia, Penn. The hawk fastened its claws around the neck of the fowl next to its body, but the duck was in deep water, and true to its nativer, it ducked and drew the hawk with it under the water. Again the duck dove, which was too much for his hawkship. The hawk released its hold on the duck and with difficulty flopped its way to the shore. The weather was cold and froze the feathers of the hawk together so that it could not fly. William Haller was a witness of the capture and escape game between the hawk and duck, and when it was all over he took a hand at the game by capturing the hawk, the hawk's feather's being so frozen together that it could not fly away. The bird measured 3 feet 6 inches from the tip of the other wing.

A Novel experiment iu surgery has been performed at Washington, D. C., by Surgeon-General Hammond. Two pieces of bone, each about two and a half inches long by one inch wide, were taken from the head of an imbecile. Dr. Hammond holds that the man's imbecility is due to the fact that the brain's too large for its receptacle, and that by giving it room for expansion reason may be restored. Some time must clapse before the result will be manifest, but so far the operation has been successful, and the patient is doing well. The doctor is very hopeful of success.

A PARTY of hunters in Colorado killed three mountain lions recently in a new, improved, and comparatively safe way. Their dogs drove the lions under a ledge of rock and kept them three while the hunters dug down into the cave from above. When they had an opening to where the lions were a rifle was pushed through. The muzzle was gripped say agely in the jaws of one of the lions and the gun was discharged. The other two lions grabbed the rifle in turn as it was withdrawn and poked in again, and each was killed by bullets through the head.

A RETIRED farmer named Babcock, of Roborough, England, killed his cat, and, having skinned it, cut off its head, trial and feet, sold it to a neighbor named Isaac as a rabbit for sixpence. A Very Queer Satellite.

The satellite nearest to the planet Jupiter must be a singular place of residence, if there be any possibility of residents at all resembling human beings. In the first place, though it it is bigger than our own moon, the substance of which it is composed is less than half as light as cork, so that it is not a very solid place of residence. In the next place, though the sun appears very dim from it as compared with what it appears from the earth, it has a moon—namely, Jupiter itself—whose surface appears many hundreds of times larger than our moon.

In the third place, the recent observations made of this satellite by Mr. Barnard in the great Lick Observatory make it not improbable that this satellite is really cut in two, and that there may be two vatory make it not improbable that this satellite is really cut in two, and that, therefore, there may be two separate little worlds, probably not separated by any great distance (for the total diameter of the two together, if there be two divisions of the satellite, which was always supposed till quite recently to be single, is not above 2.300 miles across) revolving together through space, some even of the details of one of which worlds must be visible from the other, if there be anything like telescopes on either half.

Palf the satellite is not cut in two Mr. Barnard holds that there must be a light belt round it, much like the light belt on Jupiter itself, and that this light belt produces the impression of division under certain circumstances of the orbit.
