CAL WOOD ELECTROCUTED.

Three Shocks Given—He Gravely Accuses His Victim.

DANNEMORA, N. Y., Aug. 3.—The first infliction of the death penalty at Clinton prison by electricity was on Joseph, better known as Cal Wood. Wood, who is a man of about thirty-eight years of age and physically a good specimen of manhood, passed his last night on earth as quietly as he had previous ones, and aside from a slight nervousness, apparent more particularly in the face, met his death calmly and without any evident interest in the method of execution. Three shocks were given.

When the straps were removed it was shown that the body was in the same position and the face preserved the same appearance as when the man sat down. The lips were not drawn, the eyes and mouth closed naturally, and the only indication of the current was a blister on the left leg caused by the overheated water flowing from the sponge in the electrode.

During the execution Mrs. Wood and her brother-in-law sat in the hotel parlor across from the prison entrance, and when the witnesses came out she burst into tears and buried her face in her hands. After the autopsy was finished they took possession of the body.

The chaplain and warden are both in possession of a statement of Wood in which he says that the murdered man was guilty of incest with his daughter, Wood's wife, and that he killed Pasco because of that. Mrs. Wood was asked by a United Press reporter if this was so. She said Cal was a good man and always told the truth. Just here Wood's brother Charles interfered and told her she must not talk. Judge Whitman, who was counsel for Wood, said, however, Mrs. Wood confirms in every particular Wood's story and says that her father was immorally intimate with her.

I have not tried to evade anybody. "I have not read the complaint and only know in a general way what the charges are. My accounts are all right and I am not afraid to have a thorough investigation of them. The Philadelphia matter is an important factor in this suit. I believe that the assets of the Keystone bank are more than enough to take care of any funds that the Iron Hall may have on deposit there."
