A Worthy Candidate.

Election day is fast approaching and it is therefore appropriate that the Democrats exercise vigilance in the canvass now on for the poor directorship. The Democratic candidate, Mr. Joseph P. McDonald, is one of the foremost business men of Freeland. He is a self-made man, having by his own energies worked upward from a breaker boy to the front rank in the business interests of Freeeland.

Mr. McDonald's Democracy could never be questioned. He at all times voted his party ticket, and frequently left his business to advance the interests of the candidates. This was particularly left his business to advance the interests of the candidates. This was particularly true in the canvass last November.

Being an upright, intelligent citizen, one who believes that public office is a public trust, and being honored by a unanimous nomination, he has a right to expect and receive the vote of every Democrat and citizen who believes in placing the administration of public affairs in honest, capable hands.—Hozleton Standard.

Short of absolute nationalization of the coal fields there is but one remedy for the evils of the monopoly of coal, and that is taxing all coal lands up to their full value for use. This will make it impossible for monopolists to hold the lands out use, and so render their monopolizing schemes impracticable.—K. of L. Journal.

Man versus Machine.

For some time there have been slight differences existing between Welsh workers in the American tin plate factory and the company at Elwood, Ind. Recentiy a conference was held between Manager W. B. Leeds and the men. The result of this conference was that the men refused to work unless the company acceded to certain conditions. It seems that a certain patent machine has been introdued into the tinning department which does away with the work of one man, and the company want to operate this with an unskilled laborer and pay him less than a skilled laborer commands. The Welshmen demand that skilled labor only shall be employed, as they fear that otherwise unskilled labor will take away their jobs.

The Apprentice Question.

The Apprentice Question.

A resolution asking for one apprentice for the shop and one apprentice for every eight journeymen molders employed in the shop has already been adopted by a number of machinery molders' unions, and is now being considered by other unions in the trade, on the ground that there are too many poor mechanics that cannot do justice to the trade.

Problem of the Unemployed.
Economists, statesmen and philanthropists in England are wrestling with the problem of alleviating the condition of the unemployed who are swarming in the large cities of the country. John Burns has given considerable attention to the subject, and his expressions command more than ordinary attention. He believes that the government in all large communities should give simple employment in works of public utility to the class which is mainly influenced by depression, the unskilled class, and that in these ways temporary relief can always be reached. It is better, in his opinion, to spend $5,000,000 on useful labor than $10,000,000 in charity, and he instances a great many cases in which judicious expenditures for the public relief of the unemployed havebeen made in this way with excellent results.

Another important point which he presses with great force is that in the present arrangements of labor we need to deal with this whole question on a different basis. He urges the adoption of the eight hour day, and instances a great many cases where large sums of money are paid for work overtime which might be given to relays of men, and thus enable a great many who are out of employment to secure a respectable living.

The Other Side of Immigration.

able a great many who are out of employment to secure a respectable living.

The Other Side of Immigration.

Whenever a serious investigation of the immigration question is made I trust an effort will be made to find out the relationship of certain Italian bankers and contractors to the great mass of Italian immigration. I know that a majority of the Italian immigrants are brought here without knowledge on their part of what their occupation is to be, and little or no idea as to how or where they are to live. If they knew before leaving home that they would be huddled together in badly ventilated and ill smelling teneman houses, they would prefer to remain at home living on their own farms. They would prefer almost any kind of work in Italy to being slaves in American mines or on American railroads, getting no more to eat than is given a canary bird in Italy. Stopping immigration for a stated time will in the end do no good, but if the United States government will carefully investigate the causes of immigration, and will cause the truth in regard to the avenues of employment, wages paid to laborers here, etc., to be known all over Europe, I believe there will be a great decline in the volume of immigration and an improvement in the character of that which comes.—Jeseph Pascal Fina in New York World.

C. BERNER WASHINGTON'S BIRTHDAY!

In our next issue we will devote

SIX COLUMNS OF SPECIAL MATTER

to this interesting event.

"He Refused a Crown"

is the title of a well-written article from the pen of our New York correspondent, E. J. Edwards, who shows the depth of Washington's love of America, and how, by his refusal to become emperor of the new nation, he made it impossible that a monarchy could ever be established in the United States.

"The Washington Family"

is shown in a three-column cut, and is also the subject of an instructive sketch from a famous writer. Few people are sufficiently acquainted with the early history of our first president, and the TRIBUNE will endeavor to supply this lack of information in Monday's issue.

"On the Banks of the Hudson" tells of Washington's warfare and wooing near that grand and historic river. "The Father of His Country" met and loved a rustic beauty in the Empire State, but his suit was refused with scorn. Had he won her the Colonies might never have been freed. It is a delightful romance in true life, and is worth reading. The writer also tells of the battles fought by the great general, and gives an illustration of the house around which centers the story of the treason of Benedict Arnold. It will all appear in and will be followed by many other special articles during the the year. Order your name placed on the subscription list, and enjoy the good and wholesome reading that the TRIBUNE alone can furnish.

MONDAY'S ISSUE,
