The Odor of Mus't.

The most potent of all perfumes, musk and attar of roses, are imported from the East, but are too powerful, especially the former for European tastes at the present day. It was, however, the favorite scent of that most elegant of royal ladies, the Empress Josephine. Down to the epoch of the destruction of the palace of St. Cloud by fire during the war of 1870, the dressing room of the suit she had been wont to occupy and especially the drawers of the bureau she had used, were redolent of that odor. The mortas employed in building the now ruined Mosque of Zobeide at Tauris was mingled with a quantity of musk by the plety of the masons engaged in the work, and to this day the surrounding atmosphere is highly scented with it, especially when the sun shines upon the ruins. This extraordinary durability of the secant producing quality has brought about various interesting experiments. A French clemist once exposed a small quantity of musk after weighing it to the rays of the sun in a closed room. Musk in the raw looks a good deal like axle grease, and smells worse. The popular notion that the musk of compounts notion that the musk of commerce is obtained from the muskrat is a mistake. Most of the supply comes from the musk deer, a creature that is carefully reared in India for the sake of the secretion. This secretion is shipped in the crude state, and is usel not only in the manufacture of the liquid perfums sold as musk, but also in very small quantities to give strength and staying power to many perfumes made from the essential oils of flowers. Curiously enough, the blossoms of two native plants have a noticeably musky odor.

One is the small, yellow blossom of a creeping vine known as the musk plant. Its odor is marked, and is counterfeited in the commercial perfume called musk.

The other is the blood root. The pure white blossom of that early spring plant has a distinct though delicate sundy odor. A bean known as the musk beau is a cheap substitute for animal musk.

Civet is a greasy and intensely strong secretion of the animal of that name. As sold by the dealers in essential oils, it is vellow in golor, and of about the con-

They Just Cut the Pennies in Two.

How many collectors of coins know anything about the curious half-pence issued centuries ago by English authorities, half-pence in the truest sen e of the words, since they were nothing more than minted pennies cut directly in half? Specimens of these coins have been discovered frequently among the buried treasures which from time to time have been unearthed in Great Briain. In Lancashire in 1840 were found a rare lot of coins, among which were several pennies of the time of Alfred and Edward divided in this way. Similarly divided pence of the time of Edward the Confessor have been found, and in speaking of the discovery, in 1833, of a number of these curious half-pence of the time of William the Conqueror, and unquestioned authority states that they were probably issued from the mints in that form, since the whole collection had evidently been in circulation. In the British Museum in London are specimens of these divided coins issued under various monarchs from Alfred to Henry III., with the latter of whom the custom ceased. from Alfred to Henry III., with the latter of whom the custom ceased. An eminent a heologist accounts for the divided coins by saying that this doubtlesss arose from the scarcity of small change, which was in part remedied under the reign of Edward I. by the coinage of half-pence and farthings.

Gentlemen: I desire to make a brief statement for the benefit of the suffering. I had been afflicted with catarrh of the head, throat and nose, and perhaps the bladder for fully twenty-five years. Having tried other remedies without success, I was led by an advertisement in the Sentinel-Democrat to try Hall's Catarrh Cure. I have just finished my fourth bottle, and I believe I am right when I say I am thoroughly restored. I don't believe there is a trace of the disease left. Respectfully,
