Miss Annie McLaughlin, of Freeland,
Miss Annie McLaughlin, of was with her parents here on Sunday.

Sunday evening as two young ladies of town were taking a walk they came in contact with a snake above the Cornell Ridge crossing. After fighting the snake a fierce battle and throwing several large stones at it, the monster made its way through the brush as gay in life as ever. When asked the color of the snake they replied that it was green, and about six inches long. It is a wonder, girls, you had courage enough to tackle such a monster without some assistance, but of course when in close corners persons are liable to defend themselves. Mary Ann would give you a bit of advice in the matter, but, as you are well aware, advice may cause double the work to her in answering special correspondence.

Condy McDermott, who was a resident of this place for a number of years, removed his family to Bridgeport, Pa., yesterday.

HIGHLAND DOTS.

On Tuesday one of the carpenters who is engaged repairing the houses missed his saw while working on the back street at a house in which a Hungarian family resides. After making a thorough search for the missing article and not finding it he concluded the woman knew something about it. A policeman came here yesterday and began to search the house, but when he moved a bed in which the saw was hidden, the woman snatched it from its hiding place and gave battle. She used the saw freely and with some effect, but was finally overpowered by the officer and two carpenters. She was taken to Freeland to get a dose of the law, but we are unable how much of it was given her.

Lewis Schwope, of Hazle Brook, was a visitor here last week.
