Why We Are In Sheol.

Why We Are In Sheel.

A document recently issued by our theosophical brethren lays down as one of its basic propositions the following startling statement:

This earth is hell.

We do not know whether this is so or not, but if it is then we know why it is so. It is because the man who makes a business engagement with you, promising faithfully to be on hand at a given hour, comes an hour afterward or not at ing rathriting to be on limit at a given hour, comes an hour afterward or not at all. He puts you to no end of inconve-nience and loss from which you suffer indescribably, but he does not care. It is a way he has of distributing sheel along each side of his path wherever he along each side of his path wherever he goes. Then there is the laundress. She never on a single occasion has washed your clothes clean, and that is a good slice of shed when it continues without intermission half a century. The hired girl never has been able to sweep or dust gri never has been able to sweep or dust a room properly. It is an impossibility to get unadulterated food from the gro-cer or baker, or well cooked, nourishing food for a month at a time anywhere. Then there are the spiteful, bad tempered people. They make life a sheol on their own hook. No more exquisite torture can ever be inflicted on a sensitive ture can ever be inflicted on a sensitive person who love sharmony and good will than to be forced to live with them. And it soon happens that the sensitive person almost always must live with one of these tormenting spirits. There, too, is the evil spirit who tells lies, the fiend who tries to cheat you and the boss fiend of all who is dirty and offensive in his personal habits,

Do you know anybody except yourself who is always good tempered, perfectly truthful, sincere and honest, and who is entirely cleanly and has courteous manbesides? On the whole, perhaps the sophical brethren are right. This ners besides?

Ever Read the Constitution?

The editor of Harper's Magazine suggests mildly that instead of so many attempts at amending the United States constitution an effort be made to amend the general intelligence in regard to that constitution. The hint is a good one. It has been proposed as a requirement for mas been proposed as a requirement to a naturalization that the applicant be able to read the United States constitution and show that he understands its provi-sions. Did it ever occur to the reform-ers to apply the same test to native born citizens who in some cases have been voting 40 years or more?

In fact, if put upon the witness stand under oath to tell the truth in fear of death, how many of even intelligent peo-ple, men and women, would be forced to confess they had never read the constitution of their own country, that ad-mirable document which Professor Goldwin Smith recently held up to the whole British nation, as showing how much superior our government was to theirs?

The average American citizen ought at least to read that precious document twice a year. Classes should be formed for its study, if not now, then next winter. The confounding—not to say confounded—commentaries that have been written on it are not needed. It is not written on it are not needed. It is no hard to understand in its splendid simmard to understand in its special sim-plicity, with the added light of Ameri-can common sense. The instrument alone, with the history of its adoption, will be the true basis of work and study. Teachers should first acquaint themselves with both, then teach the same care fully to their pupils. This would save many fool ideas in regard to legislation.

"Ranching. I have a chum in Texas, and he says it is a rare life. I am to buy a share in his business. It is all in the open air—shooting and riding and sport. Would it—would it inconvenience you much, Ida, to come out there with me?"

Ida nearly fell off her perch in her amazement. The only words of which she could think were, "My goodness me?" so she said them.

"Oh, no; this is better than that."
"Or I could carry the thing."
Ida burst out laughing. "That would be more absurd still."
"Then we will go quietly, and I will look out for the steering. I won't talk about it at all if you would rather not. But I really do love you very much, and you would make me happy if you came to Texas with me, and I think that perhaps after a time I could make you happy too."

"Oh, do attend to your steering," said she, smiling around at him, "and don't say any more about this today. Please don't!"

"VENIT TAINEM FELICIAS."

It was just three days after the doctor and the admiral had congratulated each other upon the closer tie which was to unite their two families, and to turn their friendship into something even dearer and more intimate, that Miss Ida Walker received a letter which caused her some surprise and considerable amusement. It was dated from next door and was handed in by the red-headed page after breakfast.

"Dear Miss Ida," began this curious document and then relapsed suddenly into the third person. "Mr. Charles Westmacott hopes that he may have the extreme pleasure of a ride with Miss Ida Walker upon his tandem tricycle. Mr. Charles Westmacott will bring it round in half an hour. You in front. Yours very truly, Charles Westmacott." The whole was written in a large, loose jointed, schoolboyish hand, very thin on the up strokes and thick on the down, as though care and pains had gone to the fashioning of it.

Strange as was the form the meaning was clear enough, so Ida hastened to her room and had hardly slipped on her light gray cycling dress when she saw the tandem with its large occupant at the door. He handed her up to her saddle with a more solemn and thoughtful face than was usual with him, and a few moments later they were flying along the beautiful smooth suburban roads in the direction of Forest hill. The great limbs of the athlete mignon gray figure, with the laughing face and the golden curls blowing from under the little pink banded straw hat, simply held firmly to her perch and let the treadles whirl round beneath her feet. Mile after mile they flow, the wind beating in her face, the trees dancing past in two long ranks on either side, until they had passed round Croydon and were approaching Norwood once more from the farther side.

"Aren't you tired?" she asked, glancing over her shoulder and turning toward him a little pink can furfly golden curl, and one blue eye twinkling from the very corner of its lid.

"Not a bit. I am just getting my swing."

"Then why write it?"
"It wasn't my own composition."
"Whose then! Your aunt's?"
"Oh, no. It was a person of the name of Slattery."
"Goodness! Who is he?"
"I knew it would come out. I felt that it would. You've heard of Slattery, the author?"

"Never."
"He is wonderful at expressing himself. He wrote a book called 'The Secret Solved; or, Letter Writing Made Easy.' It gives you models of all sorts of letters."

Ida burst out laughing. "So you ac-be quite a family party. It would be jolly." Ida sat listening to the stumbling words and awkward phrases which were whispered from the back of her, but there was something in Charles Westmacott's clumsiness of speech which was more moving than the words of the most cloquent of pleaders. He paused, he stammered, he caught his breath between the words, and he blurted out in little blunt phrases all the hopes of his heart. If love had not come to her yet, there was at least pity and sympathy, which are hearly akin to it. Wonder there was also that one so weak and frail as she should shake this strong man so, should have the whole course of his life waiting for her decision. Her left hand was on the cushion at her side. He leaned forward and took it gently in his twn. She did not try to draw it back from him. "May I have it," said he, "for life?"
