Early Transportation of Coal.

As early as 1792 a company was organized to carry coal from Schuylkill county to Philadelphia, according to Saward's Coal Journal. An ark was freighted and sent to that city. It remained for a year a heap of black stones, exciting the curiosity and jeers of the idle and knowing ones, and a monument of the supposed folly of those whom it was thought exposed their ignorance by attempting to apply these blocks of stone to any useful purpose.
